Butter Prices Down One Cent; Eggs Are Weak

PORTLAND, Ore., May 15 (AP)—Butter and butterfat prices declined 1c each at the Portland produce exchange today. Extras in butter are now 35c, standards 35c, prime firsts 24c and firsts 23c. Butterfat delivered Portland is quoted at 35c.

Egg prices were weak but unchanged. Reviewing the fruit and vegetable situation, the Portland bureau of the U. S. department of agriculture says:

"Cool rainy weather at Portland is resulting in lighter demand for strawberries. Supplies are only moderate though, and the market is steady at about 35 per crate of northwestern berries.

"The potato market is dull, after last week's flurry of increased activity. Very few covered sales are being reported, either at Portland or at Yakima valley points. New potatoes continue to move from the Gulf states in heavy volume.

"Cantaloupes have been generally considered as too high-priced to permit extensive shipments to the northwest. Several cars are now on route from the Imperial valley, however, and cantaloupes should be more plentiful in a few days.

"The entire northwest is oversupplied with spinach, with no outlets other than the local markets. Considerable acreage in Oregon fields has been plowed under."

A new creamery industry for Union county will soon be realized with the location of a new unit of the Payette cooperative organization at Union. It's a distinct step forward. Cream that formerly went out of this county to southern Idaho will be made into butter right in this valley. It brings new taxable property to the county, new payrolls. With this new creamery at Union and equally fine plants already operating here in La Grande, the interests of the dairy farmer will be served still better. It is safe to predict a much more rapid dairy development in the county during the next few years and these plants will aid that development.

The primary election will be held tomorrow. In spite of frantic campaigning by practically all candidates for governor, there is a decided lack of general interest in the outcome. And that is a serious matter. A governor will be chosen tomorrow. If a representative vote is cast, the winner will be representative and a reasonably competent administration can be anticipated after the fall election. But a light vote is dangerous. It means that the choice is left to the promoters of some selfish interest. Because selfish interest voters always go to the polls. They have an axe to grind. They see a chance to profit from the election of some certain candidate. They desire a light vote because it increases their chances. Special interest groups, of course, are not numerous in Eastern Oregon. Here the great majority of voters are interested only in the state's general welfare. But in other sections there are groups with interests not common with ours. And Eastern Oregon's only chance to guard against them is by going to the polls in large numbers. Make the decision representative. Don't neglect this small duty. It DOES make a difference to you who is nominated for governor! Be sure to vote tomorrow.

SCHOLARS

Proceedings of the American Philosophical Society would be the last place the man of the street would turn in his perpetual hunt for interesting curios, and yet those proceedings are never lacking in either. That philosophers talk about things less profound thinkers ponder over and debate was demonstrated by the recent meeting of the society, where that subject of current discussion, the modern system of education, was before the house.

The educational session resulted in a number of adverse criticisms on the average American university. These were summarized in the statement that institutions of higher learning contain "far too few genuine scholars and far too many teachers of the immature."

This criticism may be supported by comparison of the average American college with European schools where tradition has not entirely surrendered to expediency. The old universities gave no "course" or "credits," and their instruction was not given by measure. Students attended them for the sake of association with great thinkers and leaders, and intellectual maturity was the chief requirement for graduation or its medieval equivalent.

The statement of Dr. F. J. E. Woodbridge, one of the speakers, that "the development of true scholars is far more important to a university than its output of graduates," calls attention to an apparent dearth of true scholars among the thousands of young men and women being graduated from the colleges and universities today.

ered and Tolley needing six on both holes. The last three holes were halved, leaving the Americans in possession of a two hole lead at the end of the first half of the match.
Jones and Willing set a dizzy pace that the British pair could not match. Hartley, troubled by a cut hand, was the weak member of the British pair, and Torrance could not shoulder the double burden thrust upon him.
The Americans started out at a fast clip to win the first three holes. They lost the fourth but won the fifth and then captured the sixth as well to round the turn four up.
The second nine precipitated a nip and tuck battle all the way. Hartley and Torrance regained a hole at the 17th and when the home hole was halved, Jones and Willing went to lunch, five up.
Jones and Willing halved the 25th in favor with Torrance and Hartley but the Americans took
