"Mysterious Island" Is Sound Film in Colors

Abounding in rare fantasy and thrilling adventure, "The Mysterious Island," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's million dollar all-color, sound and dialogue film opens at the State theater tonight.

Few films the screen has offered may boast the original, the variety and the well balanced entertainment elements that are at once recognizable in this elaborate novelty. And despite the bigness of its settings, the unusualness of its under-water background, its fantastic submarine people and their odd dwellings, "The Mysterious Island," more than any other play based on pure imagination, possesses a human appeal and a sense of realism that makes its exotic detours plausible and impressive.

"The Mysterious Island" is not a starting picture and every member of the large cast merits unqualified praise for giving the colorful interpretation of the play a faithful interpretation. Lloyd Hughes as Nivola is at his best, likewise Jane Daly, who, for a newcomer, shows marked emotional ability, not to mention her grace and beauty. Lionel Barrymore as
