Health Talks

Typhoid Carriers

To be a prisoner for life is certainly a cruel fate, the more so if one has committed no overt crime. But when a person is "innocently" the cause of hundreds of cases of typhoid, then society has a right to defend itself. At least, so the court ruled in the case of The People vs. Mary.

Mary was for three years a cook in a family. Then in 1901, she developed typhoid fever. A visitor to the family where she worked developed the disease. A month later the husband of the family also came down with it. In 1902, Mary changed places and 4000 other members of the household were ill.

In 1904 she went to work on Long Island. Within three weeks after her arrival, four servants were affected. In 1904 Mary went to another family and six more victims developed the disease. From 1901 to 1907 Mary is known to have been the cause of at least twenty-six cases of typhoid fever.

Mary was put under military supervision. Then she secured and in 1915 secured a position as cook in a hospital for women. Soon thereafter, twenty-five cases of typhoid developed in the hospital, affecting principally the doctors, nurses and other help of the institution. Mary was discovered and placed in a hospital.

A certain percentage (2 to 4) of those who at one time or another suffer from typhoid, become so-called "carriers." These are persons, who, though no longer sick with typhoid, harbor within them the germ of the fever, usually in the gall bladder and shed them in their excretions.

Chats With Parents

YOUR VOICE

By Alice Johnson Peale

There is perhaps nothing that quite so sets the atmosphere of the home as the voice of the mother who dominates it.

I have heard over-conscientious mothers who did not realize that their voices held a chronic note of anxiety and weariness, nervous mothers whose voices were high, quick and sharp, still others who were over-dramatic in pleasure or distress, and most unpleasant of all those that were sugared with a sweetness wholly insincere.

I know one woman who is not a mother but a nursery school teacher and who possesses what seems to me the perfect voice and manner for one who deals with little children.

In her voice there is no suggestion either of those over-tones of worry and anxiety or of that artificial safety and excessive sweetness which so many women adopt in speaking to children. She speaks like and when she speaks her voice is friendly, quiet and unemotionally conversational.

Little children should live in an atmosphere which is genuinely cheerful and serene. Your voice, not only in speaking to your children but also in talking to anyone in their presence, suggests the emotional under-currents of your personality.

The mother who complains that her child is nervous and irritable will find it worth while to listen to her own voice and to the voices of her household and to ask herself whether these suggest that natural sweetness and good cheer which she expects to find in her child's disposition.

Your child has a right to a mother who inwardly is serene and friendly, whose voice happily reflects her state of mind.

Vacation Style For Capitol Is Set By Hoovers

By Sue McNamara (Associated Press Staff Writer)

WASHINGTON (AP)—Capital smart folk got a new slant on summer outings as the President's wife, cabinet women and the first woman candidate for United States senator chose cabins in the wild.

Each year sees more prominent women turning to swatters and the peace of the plains and the hills. Most of them, however, are women who have lived much in the west and know the glories of a flaming sun dropping out of sight behind mountain peaks.

Wives of the cabinet members who plan to build two-room cabins on the Rapidan near President Hoover's summer camp are all women, who like Mrs. Hoover, are used to outdoor life.

Mrs. Mitchell, wife of the attorney general, spends every summer with her family in Minnesota, where they fish and tramp and gather round the campfire at night to recount tales of the day's fun.

Mrs. Wilbur, wife of the secretary of the interior, did a great deal of horseback riding in California before a fall gave her an injury from which she is just recovering.

Mrs. Hyde, wife of the secretary of agriculture, owns and operates several farms in the middle west.

These three outdoor-loving women will be Mrs. Hoover's nearest neighbors when the stiffness of summer nights falls over the Blue Ridge mountains.

Ruth Hanna McCormack plans to "lose herself" in the wilds of Wyoming. She is telling no one the location of her western retreat. She will have complete seclusion until time to start on her campaign for senate next fall.

Mary Roberts Rinehart, another prominent Washingtonian, always spends her summers on a western ranch.

25 Per Cent Of Registered Vote Counted at Union

By Mrs. L. Z. Terrall (Observer Correspondent)

UNION (Special)—General apathy took charge of the primary election held in Union on yesterday and as a result only about 25 per cent of the registered vote was polled. If there can be any bright side to this situation it can only be that there is but little occasion with dissatisfaction with the outcome, and those who did not participate will not be heard to say that the decision is ought but correct.

Miss Lura Bieder came up from Portland to spend the weekend with her parents.

The past week has been brim full of activities, chiefly centering around the closing days of school. Nearly every day has had some special affair with actual attendance at school closing on Thursday. One of the very special features of the week was the 1930 annual reception and dance at the gymnasium Monday evening. The committee in charge of the decorations, Leona Spray, Valda Delaney, Bernard Shanks and John Georison, produced a delightful moonlight atmosphere for the dance. A sylvan setting of fir boughs and other greenery with Japanese lanterns overhead was arranged in the center of the gym for the orchestra. Class colors and a profusion of flowers were in evidence about the gym. The invitation committee, Nellie Georison, Winifred Halsey and Ted Hutchison, handled their part of the arrangements efficiently, bringing out a large crowd of alumni and invited guests. The juniors and seniors, who held their banquet at the Union hotel, were guests at the dance here.

The class play "The Wayfaring" given on Wednesday night was well acted and pleased a large audience. The characters were well chosen for the various parts and gave the crowd a lot of laughs.

About 120 people attended the meeting of the Eastern Star Wednesday evening when the past masters of the La Grande chapter, came over to exemplify the work in the costumes and language of 50 years ago. The ritualistic work was presented in an impressive manner and some remarked that they had not improved greatly. But no one expressed a desire to return to the bondage of dress styles of that period. The whole evening proved very enjoyable and the refreshment hour gave an opportunity for all to renew acquaintances.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis who have come to Union to take over the Eastern Oregon Republican have taken apartments at the George Hotel home. Both Mr. Lewis and his wife have had a good deal of experience in the newspaper game and Mr. Schird feels that he has left the paper in efficient hands. Mr. Lewis has devoted all of his business life to this work, having spent about 20 years on papers in the San Joaquin valley, California. The four previous owners of the Union paper, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis edited a paper in Goldfield, Nevada. Once a booming mining town it has gone the way of many other boom towns. Mr. Lewis is optimistic over the possibilities of Union and its adjacent territory.

Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Baird moved this week to La Grande where Mr. Baird will assume his new duties as district manager of the Mac-Marr stores.

The Eastern Oregon Light and Power company held their monthly business meeting and dance at the Sportsmen's lodge in Union Friday evening. Employees from La Grande, Baker and Union together with their wives enjoyed a social evening of dancing following the business session. The chief business of the evening was the election of officers for the ensuing year. The following were selected: president, Bert Lantz of La Grande; vice president, Grant Tucker of Union; secretary, Neal Hyder of Baker; and sergeant at arms, Jim King of Baker. Music was furnished by a local orchestra and about 40 were in attendance at the dance.
