Chats With Parents

JERRY'S CONFESSION
By Alice Judson Peale

Jerry nagged his mother for candy until she could endure it no longer. She slapped him. He stopped at once, whimpered and then rubbed his head against her as if he were trying to make friends again. She was sorry she had hit him, but he had been naughty and she did not soften.

A half hour later Jerry sat down beside his mother on the couch and without looking at her said very quietly:

"I know some people don't understand why it is that I love them just the same, even when they do things to me. But I do, and it's because if I didn't they wouldn't go on working for me and taking care of me. And then I don't know what I'd do. And I'd be all alone. So I just have to love some people."

His mother admitted then that she was sorry she had lost her temper, but told him he had been naughty enough to deserve some punishment. They made it up then and Jerry went out to play.

Jerry was only six but he stated
