Unfortunately the day's racing events ended with a very serious accident and which for a time the hundreds of spectators in the grandstand before whom the scene was enacted, feared that it would end in a real tragedy. The two strings entered in the chariot race, the Byers and the Roach string, failed to make a good start, and while Byers driving his own string consisted of four horses, the Roach string in charge of Webb, remained at the start. The latter horses were held on the inside of the track, and naturally as the Byers horses continued they also naturally held to the extreme inside. Several warnings were given, but the first team evidently believed that Byers would be able to either stop his team or turn them to the outside of the track. The crowd in the grandstand was horrified as it watched the Byers horses come rapidly down the course, and the crash came. Webb, jumped from the chariot when he saw the Byers outfit approaching, while Byers stepped from his chariot in time to avoid being thrown in the conglomerate mass of chariots, etc. When the horses finally became unharnessed and untangled, three or four were at first unable to get up. Two were later rotten on their feet and off the track. The next was found to have a broken neck and was shot. The fourth was worked on by veterinarians for considerable time, was finally killed by means of a drug and today is still alive and shows signs of becoming better. Both strings of horses have been at Union for years and their owners are very well known. We understand that Mr. Byers valued his string at $2000.
