

Beau Brummel of Civil War Days Became Samaritan of Leper Colony

CLARKEVILLE, Tenn. (P)—A beau brummel of 60 years ago became the good samaritan of the Molokai leper colony.

Such is the story recorded by Clarksville belles of that day grown old and reminiscent, their thoughts drawn to Honolulu hospital by news that Brother Joseph lies with shattered health at 87 after 44 years of toil.

In the early eighties, they recall, Ira B. Dutton, hansom and dashing Yankee who had advanced from the ranks to captain in the Union army came to Clarksville as a government agent to settle claims of citizens for horses and quartermaster stocks seized by federal troops.

Handsome and gracious, he became socially prominent and especially popular with the belles of the day.

They were surprised, naturally, when he departed less than two years after his arrival to enter the Trappist monastery at Gethsemane, Ky.

They had another stir when he reappeared in Clarksville three years later, completely transformed in spirit and appearance, and apologized to the girls he had known for letting them believe he was a single man when he was married and had separated from his wife, who in the meantime had died.

So eager to atone for the deception he wag that he spent a month in the community seeking out his friends.

As the years have passed they have read with interest of his work—as Brother Joseph—in the leper colony. He has sent Christmas tokens every year to several of these friends.

He went to the island in 1886 and three years later took up the work of administrating the colony. By scrupulous care he escaped the disease and only recently was he persuaded to go to Honolulu for hospital care.

Chancellor J. W. Stout, who as a lawyer, presented many war claims before Captain Dutton, says "of all the different men the government sent here I thought he was the fairest and most impartial."

Courthouse Where Dred Scott Case Started Abandoned For New Building

By E. K. Butler

ST. LOUIS (P)—A gray old building where the course of a nation started to swerve, has fallen victim of a swift-paced age.

A new, more stately temple of justice has pushed aside St. Louis' historic court house, hallowed by its century of service in the law.

There the history-making Dred Scott case was initiated. There once slaves were auctioned on the steps.

Among the 600,000 files moved to the new Civil Courts building, none was given as much attention as the file of the Dred Scott case. Historians see it as one of the direct causes of the Civil war.

Yellowed by age, 58 long-hand documents were carried by the circuit clerk, John Schmitt, to the vault of the new building.

The Dred Scott case file, prized possession of the court, consists of pleas, subpoenas, depositions, motion for a new trial and bills of exceptions which had a part in the original case.

The first petition in the now noted slavery case was filed in the St. Louis Circuit court April 6, 1846. The paper set forth that Dred Scott was claimed as a slave by Irene Emerson, widow of Dr. John Emerson, an army surgeon. It stated that since the negro had lived with the Emersons in free territory for more than seven years, he should be allowed to sue for his freedom.

After long litigation, Scott was given his freedom by the circuit court only to have the decision reversed by the Missouri state supreme court.

Meantime the negro became the property of an absentee master living in New York. Anti-slavery lawyers continued their interest. The case finally reached the United States supreme court. In the final decision, the Missouri compromise was voided, and masters were given the right to hold slaves anywhere in the federal domain.

The old courthouse dates from 1833. The new Civil Courts building rises 13 stories and cost $4,500,000.

The future of the old courthouse is uncertain. It may become a museum.

Health Talks

MOUNTAIN OR SEASHORE?
The physician is often asked "Which is the preferable place for a vacation—mountain or seashore?"

In general, the answer is "There is much that can be said in the recommendation of each."

But to the healthy person, there is not enough difference to overrule personal preference. The sick person must be guided by the physician acquainted with his condition, and even there the physician usually takes the patient's preferences into account.

In general, however, there is this difference between mountain and seashore. Mountain air is more pure than seashore air. It is usually not quite as humid, or moisture-laden. The air is colder, particularly at night, but the cold is not felt as much.

The air pressure is less in the mountains than at the seashore, and this promotes deeper and more frequent breathing. High altitudes are thought to stimulate the increase of both red and white blood cells in the body. In the mountains the variations during 24 hours are greater than at the seashore.

The sun is usually more brilliant at the shore, and salt water bathing is of special value to some.

In former times, climatology (the study of climates and their effects upon the human constitution) was an important part of the physician's training.

More recently this science has been neglected—probably because experience has demonstrated that there are benefits to be derived at both mountain and seashore. In the treatment of tuberculosis it has been shown that most patients will benefit from treatment at either place.

HUNTING MAD FOXES

ROCKFORD, Ill. (P)—Mad foxes on the estate of Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick, congressman, former Governor Frank O. Lowden and others in the countryside southwest of Rockford, were hunted by expert riflemen.

Four foxes had been killed and have been found suffering with rabies. Fear of the foxes was felt several days ago when one of them attacked a dog on the McCormick farm. Shortly afterward a fox invaded the McCormick lawn and snapped at her son.

Chats With Parents

THE TROUBLE-MAKER
By Alice Jackson Peale

Whenever Julie joined a group of children things began to happen. Whatever game they were playing stopped a few moments after she had made her appearance to start a battle of one sort or another.

If they were playing house she swept the tea things off the table, saying that it was a silly way to play because they didn't really have anything to eat. If another child was enjoying the swing she planted herself immediately in its path so that he had to stop to avoid knocking her down.

One day the youngsters had made a bridge of planks and sawhorses. Immediately Julie removed the middle plank and ran away with it as fast as she could.

Her particular gift, however, lay in her ability to turn all the children against one child, preferably one who was not able to defend himself. Some one of the smaller, gentler children of the neighborhood always was running home crying after one of these concerted attacks organized by Julie.

Many of us have trouble-makers in our neighborhoods, and we must try to cope with them. Often, speaking to such a youngster decently but firmly about the trouble that he is making, explaining to him just how he is spoiling everyone's fun, including his own, is a help.

Sometimes the other children can be urged to take a more aggressive attitude toward him. Sometimes it is possible to cultivate a better spirit among the children which turns them away from his influence and forces him to meet them on their own terms.

Occasionally it is possible to cultivate a more friendly and constructive attitude by providing in your own back yard the kind of play equipment that encourages cooperation.

(formerly 30 x 4.50)

The tire pictured is the handsome new Goodyear Heavy Duty in the 4.50 - 21 size (formerly 30 x 4.50)

The tire shown in this advertisement is right now one of the most attractive bargains ever offered a car-owner.

It is the new and nationally popular Goodyear Heavy Duty Balloon.

Sales are rolling up on this great tire in a volume never before equaled in the rubberbusiness on a tire of super-standard quality.

One reason is the outstanding good looks and extraordinary merit of the tire; another reason is the amazingly low price at which it can now be sold.

The tire itself, as the name

Heavy Duty implies, is big, stout, massively proportioned, armored with an extra-thick and extra-safe All-Weather Tread—and around its sleek black sidewall runs a single identifying stripe of silver.

A striking feature is the way in which the outer rows of All-Weather blocks are prised down into the sidewalls, as fresh and smart a touch as anything in modern design.

Goodyear builds this stunning new Heavy Duty for those who want to drive fast and far without worry, and who want extra immunity against punctures, blowouts, or tire troubles of any kind.

Because crude rubber is cheap this year, you can buy this special Goodyear in the size illustrated for only about a dollar more than you had to pay last year for an ordinary tire in the same size—and other sizes are priced in proportion.
