Chats With Parents

By Alice Judson Peale

"Johnny, if you do that again I'll slap you."
Johnny does it again. He is slapped, he cries and nothing has been gained. It is not only the unintelligent, ignorant parent who uses threats toward his children. People who know much better do it out of impatience, or perhaps because they can think of nothing better to say.

A threat can be successful only when it engenders fear and therefore submission. Few parents, however, actually are as harsh as they sound, and to the average child his parent's threat acts merely as a challenge.

The very nature of a threat implies that you expect your child to repeat his offense. You give him no credit for wishing to be good. Feeling that he already has the name, the child quite naturally feels he may as well enjoy the game.

Being threatened with punishment puts the normal child in a position where he really injures his self-respect if he so much as tries to be good.

The threat, furthermore, concentrates his attention not upon a desirable course of action but upon one which is prohibited. Especially with a very small child this has all the power of strong suggestion in the wrong direction.

Don't challenge your child to misbehave. Try always to put your correction in the form of a positive suggestion to do something else.

If this is not possible, at least put your prohibition in the form of a definite command that takes obedience for granted.

Jews, Assyrians Have Same Plight

BAGDAD, Iraq (AP)—Jews and Assyrians, in olden times foes, today have a grievance in common.

The British government in Palestine has restricted the return of Jews to their country, and the government of Iraq, under British mandate, has barred the gates of their old home in northern Mesopotamia to the Assyrians, because it fears that some foreign power may be promoting Assyrian settlement on peacetime grounds.

At present there are some 70,000 Assyrians in Iraq. Some 200,000 others are scattered in adjoining countries. In the war they fought with the British against the Turks and after the conflict, fled from the Turkish into British mandated territory.

Even today they speak Aramaic, which, at the time of Christ, was a current language throughout the Near East. In their churches they observe the oldest Christian rites and, most of them are Nestorians, the sect which carried the first tidings of Christianity to India.

ALL DIVISIONS SOMNOLENT WITH CHACK FIGHTERS FEW

NEW YORK (AP)—The judges at a race at the Empire City track couldn't see the finish, and had to wait for the jockeys to come back to the scales to select a winner.

The race was run in a blanket of fog and rain that came up suddenly after several of the hottest days seen around New York in July.

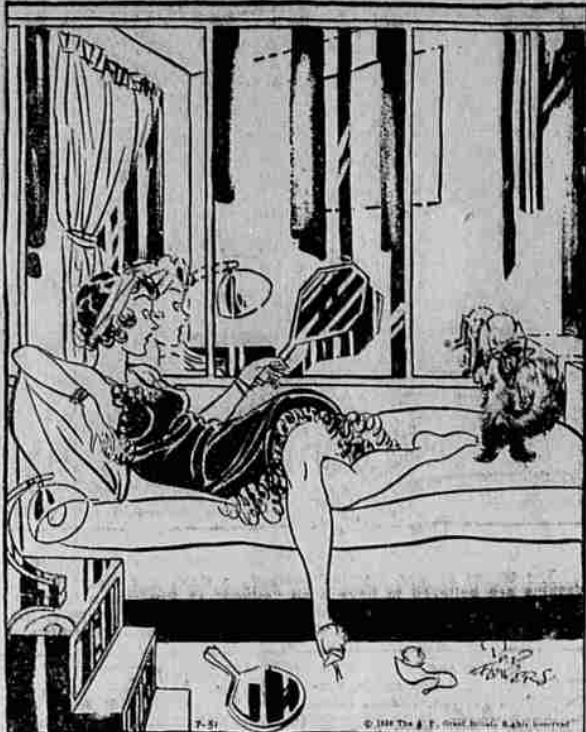

My Cornwall Boy trotted into the winner's circle, and was placed first. There was some dispute, however, about the other two positions, but finally Maurice was given the middle place, and Wig was fixed as third.

Failure of Treaty Checks League Work

GENEVA (AP)—In the failure of the convention designed to abolish export and import prohibitions, the economic work of the League of Nations has suffered a grave check.

This convention was ratified by the United States senate nearly a year ago, the second convention concluded under league auspices to be ratified by the Washington government.

After months of delay, the agreement was ratified by 17 states, the number required for entry into force. But 11 of these states make their adhesion dependent upon ratification by Poland.

Germany shares with Poland the responsibility for the failure of the convention, since Poland makes certain new German restrictions on trade the basis of her decision not to ratify.

The United States, Great Britain, Japan, Norway, Holland and Portugal ratified the convention without the reservation with regard to Poland. These six may agree to put the treaty into force among themselves, but its effect would be as reduced as to make its economic value relatively negligible.

Richard Dix Is Featured In "Shooting Straight"

Richard Dix steps out of the light comedy roles he has played so effectively within the past year and gets down to more serious business in "Shooting Straight," effective talking drama which opened at the State theatre yesterday.

Proving that he is one of the most competent actors in all screen history, Dix delivers one of the most brilliant performances of his career and makes the change-over to this dramatic role in most effective style.

Evidently this is the type of Dix role the fans like best, for audiences at the theatre yesterday were most enthusiastic in their reception.

"Shooting Straight" has enough movement and drama to have made an outstanding silent picture. But the brilliant dialog of the show, combined with Dix's superb speaking voice and supporting cast of well-trained players, makes it an ideal talkie hit.

Director George Archainbaud has combined silent screen technique with admirable dialog direction, and the result makes
