Curls May Match Winter Hats; Bangs Next Style

By Diani Merwin (Associated Press Fashion Editor)

PARIS (AP)—Are women going to cultivate Gainsborough curls to accompany their big velvet Gainsborough hats next winter?

The hairdressers' league of style headquarters thinks they will and is preparing for a busy season with the curling iron.

Milliners are not so sure.

One of the women designers who takes a leading part in launching big hats of velvet for formal afternoon occasions of autumn and next winter says that softening curls are not necessary for successful wear of big hats.

She wears the wide brims herself with short hair and a clipped neck. It's the same style of hairdressing used for the berets and bonnet styles of advance autumn and the current season.

"No I don't think women will give up their short hair and present pretoutlines or head and neck" a Rue de la Paix male dressmaker said. He asserts that sausage rolls are the chicest in a mode.

They must be soft and worn at the nape of the neck, he says.

Fringes, otherwise bangs, are the hair style of the immediate future according to a hairdresser who operates on both sides of the Atlantic.

"Short hair is doomed. In fact it's already gone," he said positively. "Curls are coming in."

Flashlight's Boom May Be Replaced

CLEVELAND (AP)—The clouds of acrid smoke that curl to the ceiling when newspaper photographers' flashlights boom a greeting to celebrities will soon be a thing of the past.

A new photographic flash lamp, electrically operated without smoke, noise or odor has been developed by General Electric engineers.

Because the new lamp confines the flash entirely within the bulb, eliminating fire hazard, it will make possible the taking of flashlight pictures in places heretofore practically impossible to photograph, such as in theaters, airships and under water.

The lamp consists of an oxygen filled bulb containing a specially coated filament which flashes a quantity of aluminum foil. The lamp operates from the regular lighting circuit or from dry or storage batteries. A new bulb is used for each flash.
