Tops Old Playthings

Tops as playthings were known in ancient times. They are referred to by Pausanias in the "Thiara Saitre" and by Virgil in the "Aeneid." They were common in Japan and China at very early periods. In pictures of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth centuries, children are shown spinning and whipping tops. A marginal drawing of a Fourteenth century manuscript, in the British Museum has a picture of a man and boy whipping a large top.

How to Be Immortal

It is curious how rarely, even by chance, men do endow their words, their inventions or their actions with their names. It seems that such an immortality is more easily earned in the world of action. It is better to burke a man, to lynch him or to guillotine him, to provide him with a bronchium or a larynx and a manacled road to ride on if you would have your name become a dictionary word.—London Nation.

Tabloid Tragedy

Once a black cat crossed a man's path and he threw a stone at the animal and killed it, hoping thereby to avoid bad luck. Several weeks later he was out strolling with his wife when suddenly the same black cat crossed his path again. This time it was hanging in a furrier's window. The Russian sable cost the man $500.

Enormous Cigar

The Retail Tobacconist says that one of the features of an exhibition held at Seville, Spain, was a cigar made in China at Seny in 1890 which took four and a half months to complete. The cigar was valued at $2,500. It was 5 1/2 feet long, 50 inches in circumference, and weighed 121 pounds. Ninety-six pounds of tobacco were required for the filler and 25 pounds for the wrapper.

Distinctive Table

A pie-crust top is the distinguishing name given to a special form of decorative rim or border used around the top of more elaborate tripod tables. They preceded the carved or fretted gallery and the Chinese style.

Colorado's National Park

The Mesa Verde National park consists of a plateau of 51,273 acres in southwestern Colorado. The ruins, which are in the Mancos canyon, were discovered as early as 1874, when W. H. Jackson led a government party there. The next year he was followed by Prof. W. H. Holmes, later chief of the bureau of American ethnology, who drew attention to the remarkable stone towers found in this region.

'PRIZE HEADACHE' HARD AT WORK FOR SCIENCE

CHICAGO (AP)—Theodore Roberts is making good on his new job of producing splitting headaches for the study of scientists seeking the cause of migraine.

He was one of 750 persons who offered themselves as study subjects when the University of Illinois hospital announced it would give a $500 job to the possessor of the best migraine headache in Chicago. Fifty dollars a month, with room and board, was offered.

Roberts, 29, then jobless, was the winner. He offered to exhibit a first-class headache which had troubled him intermittently since he was 11 years old.

His headache, he said, even had an ancestry, for his mother had suffered from similar headaches. Since medical opinion holds that migraine is hereditary, this was a point in his favor.

Roberts' first month at the hospital was given over to observation. A few days after his arrival he had his first headache. It proved "just dandy."

His normal day begins at 7:30 a. m. At 8 he undergoes a basic metabolic test, which consists of breathing into a machine which tests oxygen consumption. At 8:15 a blood sample is taken for chemistry content. Normal breakfast is provided at 8:30.

He then is free to read or write, or just loaf, until noon, when he has a normal luncheon. At 1 p. m. he enters on two hours of skin tests. After the tests his time is his own until 10 o'clock, when he retires.

The second month ushers in a slow process to "normalize" the blood, or any other element of his body. The process, it is hoped, will determine the cause of migraine, and possibly the cure.

Medical authorities say they haven't the least notion of the reasons for such headaches as Roberts', which is irregularly intermittent. "It appears hereditary," they say, and those connected with the university hospital believe its origin may lie in faulty blood texture.

The physicians expect to complete the test in 90 days, but if it should take longer Roberts will be kept on the payroll.
