In Washington

By Herbert Plummer

WASHINGTON—Famed among his colleagues in the senate for his sarcasm, his sharp tongue, his cutting words, is Thad Caraway of Arkansas.

Few relishes engaging in verbal encounter with this gaunt, semi-bald southerner.

He rouses the floor, hands deep in his pockets, head almost buried in his shoulders most of the time the senate is in session.

Suddenly he will pause in his wanderings to interrupt a speaker. More than likely such an interruption will require only a few words, but those words usually hit with telling effect.

He speaks with a drawl (his southern accent probably is the most pronounced of any senator) that is calculated to infuriate when he so pleases.

Then, with the greatest indifference, he resumes his roaming. It is as if he cared the least of any one in the world as to what else might be said.

A NEW CARAWAY

Caraway has become greatly aroused about conditions in his state at present. He has been one of the most active in pushing relief measures for those agricultural sections of the country suffering as a result of the drought.

The other day he arose from his desk to make another plea that these people be given government aid to relieve suffering.
And it was a new Caraway — a Caraway unlike the one to whom senate observers are accustomed.
He didn't roam around as usual. There was a tenderness in his voice. He talked for a long time. He pleaded for the little children "that they might eat, that they might have just enough clothes to keep them from freezing."

He cited incident after incident of suffering. He was insistent that a federal appropriation for relief in such cases was nothing new.
APPLAUSE—IN CASH
At his side during the delivery of this speech sat a tall, mild-mannered, gray-haired man. Pencil moved fast back and forth across a notebook in his fingers.
Percy Budlong, veteran reporter of debates in the senate, was taking down Caraway's speech word for word.
When the senator had finished, Budlong retired to the reporters' room to transcribe his shorthand notes for the Congressional Record.
When he had finished, he returned to the senate chamber and approached Caraway.
In his hand was a check for $50. He handed it to Caraway with the simple statement:
"For the people you described a moment ago, senator."
And Caraway was almost in tears when he told of the incident later in the democratic cloakroom.

BRIGHTON, England (AP) — Fashioned after the American baseball magnate's "Ivory farm" as a reserve of talent, plans are being formed for a movie studio here as a rival plant to Eclair, Britain's Hollywood.
Stanley Earl, British-American actor-producer, is the head of the projected development. His plans call for an up-to-date sound studio to film the work of young English screen talent.
Construction costs are estimated at $500,000.

Horns Will Blow Crime From The Earth If Given Chance, Says Loesch

Frank J. Loesch, member of the Hoover Crime Commission, shown holding one of the horns that he says will blow crime from the earth.

"If every boy and girl in the world were taught to blow a horn, I believe they could blow crime from the face of the earth." This was the striking statement made recently by Frank C. Loesch, member of Hoover's national crime committee and formerly special prosecutor of Chicago, in a recent speech in Elkhart, Ind.

In this speech, Mr. Loesch, who is nationally known for his daring attacks on Chicago racketeers, recommended a musical education and especially membership in the band, as a powerful deterrent to the wayward impulses in the growing child. To support the recommendation, Mr. Loesch cited the remarkable record of the Union League Boys' club of Chicago, of which he is one of the sponsors.

"For a number of years the club has had a 50-piece band, composed of boys under the age of 18, and this band has been an important factor in the work of the club. This organization has been instrumental in reducing juvenile delinquency in the district by more than 80 per cent. Besides the band, the club has an orchestra of 20 and a drum and bugle corps of 84 boys.

"These musical organizations have been the means of making good citizens out of many of the boys of our city who might otherwise have become community parasites, if not actual criminals.

"Many other men who have made a study of crime agree with me in recommending music, especially the band, as a character builder and a deterrent to crime. William J. Burns, world renowned detective, said, 'Show me a town with a maximum of music and I will show you a town with a minimum of crime.'

"Osbourn McCauley, former dean of music at Northwestern University, has gone on record with a statement to the effect that 'Music will cure the so-called 'flaming youth' and put strength into the social fabric of America.'

"W. Van De Wall, well known criminologist, in speaking of the effect of music, said, 'It stimulates anti-social mind, says, 'It stimulates some of the drowsy patients to vigorous action and many of the
