P. T. A. Publicity Books Completed

Presidents and the publicity committees of the local parent teacher associations met yesterday afternoon at two o'clock in the La Grande hotel for a conference. Publicity record books are now being completed and will start to the Portland officers of the Oregon Congress of Parents and Teachers on March 10, according to announcements made at the meeting.

AGRICULTURE BILL AGAIN IN COMMITTEE

sentative R. Gouley, providing for resale of land acquired for taxes was passed in the house. Three others were referred to committees, including the one creating an accident fund for inmates of state institutions who are employed in some industry. Three substitute measures were also introduced.

The old-age pension bill was defeated late yesterday, the house voting the proposal to provide a $30 a month income to dependents past the age of 65 years by a vote of 36 to 24. Settlement of this issue followed more than two hours debate.

While the house ended another controversy of the session, the senate listened to a lengthy debate upon the railroad bill forcing trains to limit their length to 70 cars freight or 14 cars passengers. The measure was approved by just enough votes to carry it through, 16 to 14. It now goes to the house.

28 Proposals Today

As a result of time being taken up over discussion of these measures the senate did not clear its calendar for the day, but will carry over several bills. Today it will consider 28 proposals, most of them amendatory bills. The house will consider 23 bills in addition to three resolutions and several motions, among which are the policemen's pension fund and changing the name of the Roosevelt highway to the Oregon Coast highway. It is expected the session will continue through until Saturday noon.

The pension bill was taken up under special order of business after an attempt to postpone consideration until another pension provision passed earlier in the day by the senate came before the house. The move, made by Ralph Hamilton, was lost. The senate measure, introduced by B. L. Eddy, provides for an interim committee to investigate the old-age pension situation over the state as to its advisability. It was approved, with but three negative votes, following more than an hour's discussion in the senate chamber.

Earl Bronaugh, author of the old-age pension plan, opened discussion for the proposal on the grounds that it was time Oregon was doing something to care for its aged. The period of poor farms, he said, had passed, and unless something better was offered he asked the legislature to approve this plan. The cost, he stated would be less than the cost of operating poor farms.

Opposition to the measure was voiced by several representatives on the grounds that it would add another burden upon the taxpayers, that the pensions would not eliminate need for poor farms, would benefit many unworthy parties, and it is a tendency to encourage socialism. Proponents argued the present unemployment situation, caused by modern machine methods, made it imperative that some means be taken to care for the unfortunates.

Allen, Eckley for Pensions

Those voting for the pension bill were Representatives Allen, Anderson, Andrews, Angell, Bronaugh, Bynon, Delap, Eckley, Hellberg, Hill, Howard, Keasey, Lawrence, Lee, Lewis, Manning, McAllister, McCourt, Schaupp, J. N. Scott, J. H. E. Scott, Mrs. Smith, Wells and Lonergan.

Opposed to the pension bill were: Chindgren, Chinnock, Day, Deuel, Fisher, Gill, Glass, Gordon, Gouley, Hamilton, Janneson, Johnson, Knapp, Macpherson, McCornack, McGraw, McPhillips, Mott, Nash, Nichols, Norton, Oxman, Peters, Proctor, Smith, Snell, Stewart, Stockdals, Swift, Taylor, Temple, Thornburgh, Tompkins, Weatherford, Winslow, Yates.

The limited train bill in the senate would provide that all freight trains not be permitted to haul more than 70 cars and passenger trains not more than 14 cars. It was introduced by Senators Jay Upton, J. E. Bennett, W. E. Burke, Gus Moser and Joe Dunne and was sponsored by the railroad brotherhoods.

Safety precaution was the basis of support of the measure, while opponents declared it would impair the efficiency of the railroads, require additional expenditure of money, and that long trains were not a detriment to safety of crew members. The matter of rates entered into the discussion, the statement made by opponents that eliminating long trains would possibly wipe out the ten per cent differential rates for Portland over Seattle, the bill establishing an artificial barrier to the Portland route comparable to the mountain barrier to carriers into Seattle.

Union Vote Split

The vote on the measure was: For —Bailey, Bennett, Booth, Burke, Dunne, Fisher, Franciscovich, Hall, Kiddle, Kuck, Miller, Spaulding, Strayer, Upton, Wheeler, Marks.

Against—Billingsley, Brown, Carsner, Crawford, Dunn, Eberhard, Eddy, Johnson, Jones, Mann, Moser, Schulmerich, Staples, Woodward.

The bill had attracted wide attention in the state and had been the subject of several hearings before the committee on railroads and utilities and brought to the capitol a formidable lobby of railroad attorneys and brotherhood representatives.

The senate killed by indefinite postponement house bill No. 15, which had for its purpose the closing of county offices on Saturday afternoons in Klamath, Lake and Jackson counties.

County Commissioners of Multnomah county are authorized to provide in the county budget not to exceed $7500 in any year prior to December 31, 1933 and there after not over $10,000 in any one year, in a substitute bill offered the house by the Multnomah county delegation in connection with the maintenance of an art museum in Portland. Free access must be permitted to the public at all times. The former bill was defeated, but placed upon reconsideration by motion.

EBERHARD EXPLAINS VOTE

State Senator Color R. Eberhard, in a communication with the Observer today, explained his vote on the railroad train length bill. In 1924 and 1925, the train men consented to the longer trains on a basis of an increase in pay, he says. The records show that there have been no accidents occasioned by the increased lengths of trains, and for that reason, Senator Eberhard is of the opinion the present condition should stand.

The Dalles Plans Processing of 6000 Barrels of Cherries

THE DALLES, Ore. (AP)—As a result of the protection given Pacific coast growers of white cherries under the recent congressional tariff act, The Dalles Cooperative Growers association is considering an expansion of its plant here and inclusion of equipment which will make possible the annual processing of six thousand barrels of Royal Anne or Stark's Gold cherries for maraschino stocks. The cooperative the past year processed five hundred barrels which were shipped by the Panama canal to preservers at New York City.

An outlet for white cherries for maraschino purposes will aid the market for canning stocks, it is anticipated. As the maraschino cherries have to be pitted and stemmed by hand, expansion of the processing will add materially to the payroll here, H. G. Miller, manager of the cooperative, said.

Estimates Indicate 1930 Wool Increase

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13 (AP) — Revised estimates by the agriculture department yesterday placed the 1930 wool clip production at 336,007,000 pounds, 25,446,000 pounds above that for 1929.

Mohair production for 1930 was estimated at 16,006,000 pounds, in the six important producing states, an increase of 300,000.

The increase in the amount of wool shorn in 1930 was attributed both to upward revisions in the number of sheep on farms in a number of states and to an additional allowance for wool shorn at commercial feeding establishments.

The amount of pulled wool produced in 1930 was 61,900,000 pounds, an increase of 7,400,000 pounds over 1929.
