RELIGIOUS MASTERPIECES ON GOOD FRIDAY PROGRAMS
NEW YORK (4)—Good Friday, April 3, is to be observed via radio with the presentation of four religious masterpieces.
Other programs on that day will be somewhat changed in favor of classical and chamber music, according to plans being made by NBC.
At 2 p. m. (EST) the hour generally considered to have been the time of Christ's death on the cross, NBC will stop broadcasting for a 60-second period of silence.
The day's programs will include the Children's Crusade, a musical legend; Brahms' requiem; the oratorio, "The Seven Last Words of Christ"; and the Wagnerian music drama, "Parsifal."

SHUT-INS' RADIO LIGHTENS 13 YEARS OF INVALIDISM
HIGHSPIRE, Pa. (4)—Bedridden for more than 13 years, Walter Alleman finds the radio and letter-writing his only diversions.
By the side of his bed is a radio receiver, so close at hand that he can reach over and tune in the station he wants. It operates during practically all of his waking hours. He even uses it as a musical background for his reading and letter writing.
Alleman, who is now 39 years of age, is unable to sit up or turn his head. He is a member of several shut-in clubs.

HE'D LOSE BUSINESS TO HEAR DADMROSCH

AKRON, O. (4)—Radio closes at least one doctor's office here for an hour on Fridays.
No visitors or telephone calls for professional advice are tolerated by Dr. Malcolm Dean Miller while the Walter Damrosch program is under way.
He posts a hand-printed sign reading: "Notice—Friday mornings—this door will be locked and telephone disconnected on days when there is Music Appreciation Hour."

EASTERN STATES SUPPLY MOST BROADCAST TALENT

NEW YORK (4)—Eastern states have supplied most of the talent for the CBS network programs.
A survey shows that 43 per cent of the entire staff came from some division of the Atlantic seaboard, with well over half of that number from New York and Massachusetts.
Second in the origination classification are the Middle-Western states, while the South leads the Far West.

AIRMAIL KEEPS HIGH RECORD

ATLANTA (4)—A percentage of 99.20 of the 233,870 scheduled miles of the airmail between New Orleans and Houston was maintained in 1930. The percentage on the New Orleans-Atlanta line was 98 per cent perfect.

By Percival Christopher Wren Author of 'MYSTERIOUS WAVE' 'BEAU GESTE' 'BEAU IDEAL'

SYNOPSIS: Dr. Charters has every reason to regret the presence of John Wayne as a patient in his nursing home. Not because he knows criminal facts about the doctor, the stranger has been admitted to obtain for himself a gift for the murder of "Sledge" Schlicht, one of Charters' confederates in a big diamond heist in America. Wayne repulses a fatal attack by Charters' right-hand man, Mr. James, and then escapes a rift between Charters and his associate, Dr. MacAdoo, whose evil past he also knows by telling the latter to demand of Charters a half share of the "Lauderdale 10,000 pounds." This involves an attractive patient, Marjorie Lauderdale, whose aunt was a companion of Charters' partner in a big diamond heist. Marjorie is a bigger one in the Lauderdale business, she finds the source of his information.

Chapter 13 TEN THOUSAND REASONS

DR. CHARTERS, bending over his seated partner, heavily pressed Dr. MacAdoo backward into the chair with the ruler, and stared into his eyes.
"Who told you about the 10,000—reasons?"
Dr. MacAdoo blinked, the pressure of the end of the ruler increased against his heart, and he tried to withdraw his eyes from the hypnotic gaze that held them.
"Do I get my share?"
"You do."
"How much?"
"Er—half."
"On your word of honor?"
"Half. On my word of honor. Who told you the fee was ten thousand?"
"This man Wayne."
"What?"
"This man Wayne. And he told me to tell you I ought to get my share."
Dr. Charters sat down in his chair, pushed his hand across his face, and then rested his brow upon the hand as he stared in fear and amazement at Dr. Mangel Machado.

Marjorie Lauderdale, sitting at her window, listless, unhappy, resentful, pondered the implications of the peculiar conduct of this strange person, Mr. Wayne. For his conduct had been peculiar with regard to herself, quite apart from the amazing eccentricity of his general behavior.
On first catching sight of her, he had looked at her in an extraordinary manner; had called her "Rosemary"; and it had seemed as though he were going to come—and kiss her; greet her by her own name—as if he already knew her. . . . Or was it as though she reminded him of somebody?
And that second time, when she had been sitting on the seat in the garden and he had come and spoken to her, how his burning deep-set eyes had seemed to search her thoughts and mind and soul. There had been nothing mad about his conversation then. Nothing curious whatever, except that he had again called her "Rosemary."
Why hadn't she followed her impulse and trusted him?
What a little fool she had been to snub him and declare that she was perfectly well and happy, and not in the least need of his help and advice nor of that of anybody else.
Of course she wasn't either well or happy; and of course she wanted help and advice—more than anything else in the world.
And yet what else could one say or do when a perfect stranger, supposed to be mad, came and uttered mysterious warnings against taking the medicine that was prescribed for one in an excellent and famous Nursing-Home?
But then again, her medicine did not agree with her. . . . Not even the medicine she was having now, from Dr. Charters, although it was quite different from the stuff she had had from that beastly Dr. MacAdoo.
She did want help and advice. That horrible James man! . . . What she wanted, more than anything, was help to get away from the place, for there was not a soul in it that she liked or trusted. Not even the Head Sister, Nurse Weldon, though she liked her brother Would Slater Weldon take her to see him, and would the Doctor let her go?
Matron was all right, of course, but one only saw her at meals, and now that they were keeping one upstairs so much, one hardly saw her at all.
How foolishly she had behaved when Mr. Wayne came and walked up and down on the lawn beneath her window and looked up at her from time to time. Why had she withdrawn in that childish way?

"Dear Mr. Wayne," wrote Marjorie—
"I am very sorry that I was so rude when you wished to be helpful, and as I ridiculed the idea of needing any help, I want to apologize and in any exacting the opposite, I do want help, for I am getting frightened. It seems too silly to put into words, but I really believe that I am not really ill at all. I believe I was deliberately made 'ill' at home, and am being kept 'ill,' although I refused to have anything more to do with Dr. MacAdoo and his medicine. I believe Dr. Charters' medicine is just as bad, for I have felt worse each time I've taken it. I'm going to take your advice. I shall pretend to take it, but throw it away instead. But what shall I do if Nurse Jones or Sister Weldon stands over me?"
"I can't understand why I've had no answers from my uncle. I don't believe my letters have been posted—or else that his letters to me are stopped. Other letters, too, that I know should have come in answer to mine. It sounds absurd and ridiculous, I know, but I can't help thinking it. I'm perfectly certain that Uncle Will would come here at once and kick up a frightful row if he knew how I feel."
"He's weak, and he's under Aunt Maud's thumb, but he is quite kind always. What is most likely is that he has had my letter in which I begged him to come and fetch me, but has also had one from Dr. Charters saying that he mustn't take any notice of my nonsense. Aunt Maud could easily persuade him that it would be very foolish to take me out of Dr. Charters' hands."
"Will you please forgive my rudeness and help me if you can?"
"Yours very sincerely,
"MARJORIE LAUDERDELL."
"Oh, Mr. Wayne, I'd give anything to get away from here. I do so loathe Nurse Jones—and that man James."
Marjorie sat at the window, hoping for sight of John Wayne; but it was not until the following morning that, on one of her many excursions from bed to the window, she saw him strolling on the turf.
Snatching her letter from its place of concealment, she waited until Wayne glanced up at her window as he passed. Beckoning, she dropped the letter to the grass some twenty feet below her window, and watched while John Wayne sauntered to the spot.
Palatine: Subtle, killing quickly—painlessly; others that bring death agonies, in tomorrow's installment Dr. MacAdoo is revealed as one at home among them.
