LIVER FOR ANEMIA
Until very recently pernicious anemia was considered an insidious and slowly progressing but fatal disease, against which the science and art of medicine availed little.

Now, thanks largely to the works of Dr. George H. Whipple and Dr. George R. Minot, we have the means with which effectively to combat the disease. Liver, liver extract, and dried and defatted hog stomach, has been found effective in pernicious anemia. Dr. Whipple, who is connected with the University of Rochester, conducted experiments with dogs suffering from anemia due to hemorrhage and demonstrated that the reproduction of lost blood largely depends on and can be influenced by diet.

Previously the belief prevailed that iron was the most important item in the treatment of anemia. Now it has been shown that in simple anemias, the feeding of liver is effective in stimulating to the production within the body of new red blood cells and of hemoglobin (the iron-containing element of the blood).

An adequate supply of iron is still of value in anemia, but the stimulus to reproduce blood cells comes from other substances. Dr. Minot of Harvard applied the facts derived from Dr. Whipple's experiments to the treatment of pernicious anemia, with the result that the disease, formerly almost invariably fatal, can now in many instances be controlled.

The liver treatment of pernicious anemia, like insulin in the treatment of diabetes, does not achieve a cure. The liver preparation must be given the patient throughout his life.

Unlike insulin, however, liver or its extract, is taken by the patient by mouth and not in the form of an injection.

The dried and defatted hog's stomach substance has been found to be as effective as liver and may be used as a substitute.

Crotalaria has been introduced in South Carolina as a soil-building crop.

Records of 209 demonstration plantings of sweet potatoes in South Carolina show a net profit of $76.12 per acre annually.

Residents of the county today stated that the Grande Ronde river, which was 12 to 15 inches higher early this morning than last night, was at one of the worst flood stages in local history. Water had overflowed the banks in several places, including around the stockyards, the city pump house, and the water was over the road the other side of the city park. The section—formerly an auto camp—this side of the park, which was filled and seeded last year, was inundated.

Conditions Improving
In other sections of town where streams were rising, some minor flood conditions were reported. A few cases were reported on the north side where water had reached the floors of houses. Conditions were improving this morning in general, with the halting of the downpour.

Some people living near the river moved out some of their furniture last night and early today, and many were up all night watching in the hope it would not reach the danger point.

Reports were that the remainder of the old dam at Perry had been washed away, with the halting of the downpour. Some people living near the river moved out some of their furniture last night and early today, and many were up all night watching in the hope it would not reach the danger point.

Traffic Held Up
Traffic conditions on the railroad and the Old Oregon Trail highway were held up by the water, which practically all of the trouble existing to the west of La Grande. Scores of passengers on transcontinental carriers and on the mountain springs bridge were marooned here as far as westward travel was concerned, until 9 o'clock.

The observer's correspondent at Higley, writing from the bridge, stated that the highest water in recent years in the Grande Ronde river and Five Points creek. The latter was four or five feet higher at the bridge than it was reported to be this morning. Considerable damage has been caused, and the Mt. Emily logging camp and Starkey farming communities, are cut off.

The worst property damage in the Hilgard vicinity was the destruction caused at the Mountain Springs service station and camp. The water washed the new cabins from their foundations, moving some seven feet east of the original site. The barn was washed into the main current and cattle were stranded in the river.

When the warning came to move at 8 a. m., they, as a rule, had their things packed up and were ready to move. The Fred Rees home was surrounded by water, and the family was stranded on the floor. Mr. and Mrs. Rees and children were taken to the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Jones.

Slayers of Three Washington Women Leave Police Defeated by Mysteries
Editor's Note: This is the fifth of seven busy trying to find the murderer of another woman.

By Sam Bledsoe
WASHINGTON (AP)—The average citizen in Washington is inclined to blame any unidentified night noises on cats or the wind.

His sleep is usually sound, and the laundryman carries his clothes unhampered by the racket. The police might be slightly patronizing toward their brother officers in more "uproarious" cities were it not for a series of baffling murders.

The slayers of three women who have met violent ends within the past two years never have been found. The strangest case of all is that of Mary Baker, navy department clerk.

Miss Baker, daughter of a Virginia minister, was a quiet girl, nearing 30. She went to church on the day she disappeared, a church near the downtown business section. She walked away with two girl friends, left them on a busy corner in the next day, and was never seen alive again.

Her body was found the next day stuffed into a culvert near Arlington national cemetery. She had been shot three times.

Scores of suspects were arrested and released. No motive could be established, nor had one been established when Herbert M. Campbell, Virginia real estate operator, was brought to trial charged with her murder.

The authorities never were able to prove that Campbell ever saw Mary Baker. The evidence against him was the statement of ballistics experts that his gun fired the bullets found in the girl's body.

Campbell offered a good alibi and the verdict "not guilty" was a foregone conclusion.

That trial was during last October, and the New Year celebrations had hardly died away before the police

Although the water was down several inches early today, it was still dangerous at that time. The Perry bridge was damaged by swirling waters. The water was over the road this side of Perry at the crest of the flood, but receded shortly afterwards.

Railroad officials in La Grande said this morning that the track east of Duncan and 15 to 20 miles west of Meacham was washed out for 400 feet, due to flood waters of Meacham creek. Also, three miles east of Gibbon there is a stretch of 800 feet of track washed out. Both will have to be bridged before train movements can be renewed. Waters were reported to be receding this morning. By 11 o'clock this morning the river in La Grande was 13 inches lower.

No. 10 yesterday morning was the last train to go west from here and No. 6 yesterday was the last to come today to La Grande from Portland. After those two trains, movements through here ceased.

Deaths Reported
Rainfall in three Pacific Northwest states the past 48 hours had claimed probably three lives today, injured one man, paralyzed train service in sections, isolated communities, played havoc with highways, washed away farm houses and caused farmers to evacuate their homes. The weather bureau could promise no immediate relief.

Deaf P. Olsen, 42, Seal Rocks and Rex Brown, Perry, were missing after their boat had capsized in the swollen Willamette river near West Fir, Ore. Four other men in the boat were rescued.

Deaths Near Walla Walla.
Phillip Fox, 73, of Walla Walla, Wash., died, investigators said, from shock and drowning when he fell from a bridge while protecting his barn from rising waters. W. K. Wagner, thrown into a stream near Milton-Freewater, 10 miles from Walla Walla, died when he was struck by a driving truck collapsed, was injured seriously. Unconfirmed reports said three Walla Walla residents were missing.

Unoccupied houses in that section were floated away and between 300 and 500 persons were forced to protect their stores and homes by embankments of sandbags. Walla Walla streets were covered with about two feet of water, many business men being marooned in their offices. Several bridges in the vicinity had floated away.

Rains Hit Central Idaho.
Torrential rains in North Central Idaho had paralyzed train service, flooded the homes of a family, and a passenger train was marooned between Juliaetta and Kendrick. A log jam crushed a railroad bridge and threatened 18 others over Oregon.

Driving rains still were flooding already overflowing streams and up to a late hour yesterday precipitation of 2.19 inches had shattered a 22 year old record.

Communities Isolated.
In Oregon, gale-driven rains had caused isolation of Tillamook, Pacific City, Breitenbush and Detroit and flooded the homes of a family, and a passenger train was marooned between Juliaetta and Kendrick.

Trains were halted along the Southern Pacific lines into Tillamook by slides and bulging streams had cut off all highway routes into the city. Summer cabins at Brightwood and Arwannah were breaking up and being carried away. Passengers from the Spokane, Portland & Seattle railway were transferred to buses in the vicinity of Knappa where slides blocked the railroad tracks. Damage was reported to farm lands in many different sections.

Landslide at Hoquiam.
A landslide at Hoquiam, Wash., destroyed a garage and furnace room and damaged the home of H. J. Sandstrom. Slides blocked the Grays Harbor city road and rivers were out of their courses and still rising.

The flood conditions today is the worst since Apr. 1, 1904, when two days as the floods receded. Although avenue through the business section, coming from a break in the levee near the old slaughter house, J. H. Peare today was showing pictures of the flood, taken at the intersection of Jefferson and Fir, showing the Slater building. Another picture was taken of the Oro Bell dam, showing between eight and ten feet of flood water. This picture shows the old pump house which the railroad used. These two floods, occurring just 27 years apart, are the two outstanding in La Grande's history.

Death Reported.
Reports from Pendleton this afternoon said that Tom Apolotolote, 45, a farmer living in the Mission area east of Pendleton, was reported to have drowned last night. Floods were sweeping over the area.

Many sheep are believed to have been drowned in the flooded Echo district. Farmers there said the animals were seen standing shoulder deep in the water. It is thought many died when they were crowded under the water by others attempting to reach higher ground.

Motor stage service between Walla Walla and Pendleton was resumed today as the day opened with sunshine, rain began falling late in the morning.

Second Course To Be Held By Mr. Blankenship

Last week it was announced by J. T. Longfellow that a second university extension course in American literature would be offered in the La Grande High school, providing at least 35 registrations could be secured. Mr. Longfellow said this morning that more than the required number have already registered, and that the new course is thus a certainty. He talked with Professor Russell Blankenship by telephone last night, and received his assurance that he would be on hand for the opening session of the class Thursday evening at 7 o'clock.

Professor Blankenship, who is the author of a recent college text book in literature, is recognized throughout the northwest as an authority in his field, and local people consider it a distinct privilege to be able to secure his services as instructor of the extension course here.

The new course will be a study of the chief currents of American literature since 1800, beginning where the former course was concluded, and placing the main emphasis on the novelists from Howells to Hemingway, though poetry and drama will also be discussed. The class will meet every Thursday evening from 7 to 9 o'clock, though an extra session will have to be arranged during one week in order to complete the course by the end of the school year.

Two term hours of university credit will be awarded those who satisfactorily complete the work of the first course—87 whether taken for credit or not. Several people from outlying communities of the county were registered, which is an indication of the wide appeal of the course.

OLSON REPLIES TO CRITICISM OF STATEMENT

Dr. E. Olsen, now in the Unity country in connection with the drilling in search of oil, issued a reply in Tuesday's issue of the Baker Daily Record to statements recently made by J. C. Bowen in criticism of his geological report.

The reports made by the U. S. geological survey in 1920 and 1921, according to admission now made, did say "certain Eastern Oregon wells are recommended for drilling, which is more than I said; and that Eastern Oregon could not be regarded as impossible territory for the accumulation of oil in commercial amounts." Dr. Olson said, "It should be here remembered that the U. S. geological survey in question has said less than that about several potential oil fields which have since become great oil producing fields. . . . I am sorry to be compelled to tell . . . that Mr. Bowen did not tell the truth when he said that the underground located two dry wells at Eugene and Cottage Grove. There is not one producing oil or gas well on earth that would be found if they had quit drilling. . . . These two wells were lost and not carried to the geological depths as reports were proved. The Eugene well was registered, which is an indication of the depth was 4500, and the Cottage Grove well was lost at about 1900 feet, and the geological depth was 3600. No . . . man could call these wells dry . . . as far as they were carried they were in a most encouraging oil and gas formation. The Eugene well struck heavy gas pressure at 2500 and was lost in so much oil that the contractor declared he had a commercial well. I still maintain that these wells were located on oil as many geological reports . . . have strongly reported."

A movement is now underway here to bring Dr. Olson to this county to make a survey.

What puts the fluff in fluffy muffins
It's the millions of tiny bubbles in the batter, released by the cream of tartar in your Baking Powder. Unfortunately, there are cheap substitutes for cream of tartar. They make bubbles too, but not the tiny, fluffy kind. Ask any domestic science teacher or any dietitian. Not every baking powder contains cream of tartar, for the substitutes cost a lot less. Look on your baking powder tin. See if you see the words "cream of tartar" anywhere. It's important!
