

33 Answer Grid Call At Baker; Eight Veterans

Thirty-three players, three times as many as turned out for spring football practice in 1930, have been issued uniforms for spring drill this year. Coach George Scott announced today. The squad will start practice as soon as water is turned into the showers at the tourist camp.

There are as many players on the spring grid squad as turned out for practice as any time last fall. Coach Scott said the team is the best balanced of any he has coached since coming to Baker. There are eight letter men on the squad.

The football practice this spring will be similar to that engaged in during the fall, except that the coach will place more emphasis on fundamentals of the game.

The men who have been issued suits are: Frank Arthur, Coen Hammond, Arthur Harding, Donald Smurthwaite, Joe Geddies, Russell Pratt, Roy Crockett, Cub Bagley, Dick Truscott, James Crockett, Chet Brown, Charles Smith, Oren McCray, James Gentry, Randall Eberger, William Vaughn, Curtis Shirley, Joe Williams, William Kempfer, Jack Lew, Denver Southard, William Vermillion, Ray Rossum, Robert Lowe, Norman Ragsdale, Andy Shornakoff, Paul Spence, Alvin Oak, Keith Blanchard, Roy Huska, Cam Vermillion, Pat Lowry and Marvin Wendt.

This Game Of Golf

By O. D. Keeler

Out here on the Pacific coast, more specifically in Los Angeles, where this correspondent is living for a couple of months, a brand new golfing hero had popped up.

It is called the "Evil Eye" — that is the name a sports magazine editor gave it. And, I regret to say, its malicious operations (alleged) first were noticed among feminine golfers, and, to date, have been restricted to their ranks.

The editor was discussing the unexpected defeat of one of the best California players at the hands of several supposedly inferior players, in various tournaments, and the expressed belief that the player in question was affected by the adverse pulling of galleries composed largely of members of a club she had "deserted" (he said) to play for another club.

"It isn't that," replied the woman to whom he was speaking. "It is the evil thought held by one woman in the galleries." (continued the editor) this lady went on to say that a lot of the girls believed with her that this woman had mastered mental telepathy to the extent that she could make a golfer miss her shots, or at least some of them.

VICTIM DENIES ALL.
This deplorable suspicion, or conviction, apparently dating back to Salem, Mass., or the late hypothetical Svengali, was made the subject of comment by one of the leading sports writers of the section, and this elicited a letter to him from the eminent lady golfer who had been mentioned as the victim of the malign influence.

This letter, according to my own unimportant ideas, was quite the most sensible factor of the entire discussion. The golfer said she understood the writer's report and the victim of the "Evil Eye," and had even heard that she was said to have started the rumor.

She denied the latter report unqualifiedly, and dismissed the other with the reasonable explanation that she had played relatively poor golf through most of the winter season, and had deserved to lose a good many matches.

IT WON'T WORK.
I cannot possibly work up much of a perspiration over the "Evil Eye" theory, and more especially its reverse English. I have tried honestly, through a long career of watching golf competitions in which I was immensely interested, never to pull against any competitor — figuring that he had enough to struggle with at best.

But I have done one colossal pulling FOR a certain competitor, now retired from the scene of action. At times I have pulled so hard that, if such things had any effect at all, the results must have been magnificent.

Hum-ho! But the long putts stayed out, just the same — or they went down, just when I had collapsed to an utter and abysmal discouragement and given up.

GIRL PITCHER WHIFFS BABE AND GEHRIG

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., April 3 (AP) — Jackie Mitchell, 17-year-old girl pitching star, made her debut into big time baseball Thursday by striking out Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig in succession, as the New York Yankees and Chattanooga met in an exhibition game.

Going into the game in the first inning to pitch only to the Babe, she forced the mighty king of swat to swing twice and then caught him flat footed with a pitch straight down the middle of the plate. She also chose to pitch to Gehrig, striking the Yankee first baseman out on three pitched balls. She walked Tony Lauzeri before being taken out of the box.

Sport Slants

Down in the midst of the North Carolina pine country, where the celebrated Duke tobacco and power millions have created one of the greatest collegiate developments of all time, William Wallace Wade has completed the first stages of his new job, the object of which is to put Duke university on the athletic map in general, the football sector in particular.

Wade has taken charge there after eight years of sensational success at the University of Alabama. The engagement of the tall, grey-haired Tennessee is typical of the big way in which Duke is doing things, athletically as well as scholastically.

Before he put his football charges through their first spring workout in a practice game that revealed a startling wealth of gridiron talent, Wade talked with this correspondent in his office in the new gymnasium, or "field house."

Like everything else about the premises, the building bespoke its newness and the minute attention to the last word in equipment. Everything about the far-flung Duke campus, split into two sections for men and women, is epic and spare.

Construction is still in progress, with the baseball field being linked to the magnificent athletic plant and an imposing stone chapel being added to the main group of college buildings.

It isn't visible to the naked eye, if anything necessary to the establishment of this remarkable institution has been overlooked by the trustees who have handled the $20,000,000 building program and will administer the endowment capital of upwards of $40,000,000—figures exceeded in the American collegiate world only by Harvard.

NOT JUST FOOTBALL.
To William Wallace Wade, Duke presents a rare opportunity to carry out his ideas and ideals of college athletics.

"Our object isn't simply to turn out a lot of first-rate football teams, of course we hope to make a showing on the gridiron and we may do so this year, but we have undertaken an athletic program designed to benefit all the students.

"To do this, our program will be three-fold — to stimulate general and specialized intra-mural sports, to develop the proper coaching and to take part in intercollegiate competition."

Football coach, is general athletic director. He has had broad experience, although his fame rests chiefly on his ability to develop gridiron talent. He will visit his old friend, Bob Zuppke, at Illinois this spring for consultation on the best methods to employ at Duke.

Take It or Leave It.
