Finish Coos County Bridge by January

MARSHFIELD, April 18 (AP)—The isthmus inlet bridge at Bunker Hill, for which Coos county voted a $300,000 bond issue, will be completed by January 1, next, according to Ben F. Liesch, contractor. Virtually all the bridge false-work is up, and lumber for this work and for coffer dams amounted to more than one million board feet. Half of the concrete columns and expansion beams have been poured. The construction of the "fixed" dam of steel construction will begin next week. The bridge will be 1,745 feet long and will open the Coos river valley.

Wealthy New York Ticket Seller Dies

NEW YORK, April 15 (AP)—Joe Leblang, 57, who made a fortune by selling theatre tickets at cut rates, died of heart disease yesterday. His establishment in the basement of a Times Square drug store is thronged nightly at theatre time by persons hunting for last minute bargains. He was considered one of the wealthiest of the Broadwayites. At his central ticket agency he sold seats at a nominal advance over office prices for shows that were doing too well to get into his cut rate department.

Marshfield Host to De Molay Conclave

MARSHFIELD, April 18 (AP)—Two special trains and a chartered stage will bring 400 De Molay youths and at least 200 parents to Marshfield for the annual De Molay state conclave April 24 and 25. One hundred Portland youths and 65 alumni members of the Portland chapter will make the trip. Groups will attend from Klamath Falls, Medford, Ashland and Grants Pass. The Portland degree team will put on the initiatory work.

Nautical Term
A storm-blast sea in a sea heaving in a gale, usually with light wind.

Chapter 20
THE UNSETTING SUN

MY days and my sleepless nights were a compound of misery and of wrath. Alternately I was paralyzed with horror and galvanized by rage against those who had dared to tear the child from home and keep her a prisoner.

The police, a score of detectives, and other private individuals were constantly at work.

Those in a position to know best assured me that I should very soon receive some communication from the kidnapers, making proposals for the safe return of the child as soon as certain conditions had been complied with.

Again and again I was assured that it was perfectly certain that the child had only been kidnaped for ransom, and that as soon as the criminals had laid their plans for the safe receipt of the ransom money the child would be returned unharmed, and I was advised instantly and fully to comply with the demands of the kidnapers.

There would be time enough when my child was returned to me to consider the question of punishment.

The advice was unnecessary. Should they demand the payment of everything that I possessed in the world, they should have it, and if they demanded twice as much they should have that, for I would borrow it.

But I promised myself that, unless I died before my mission was fulfilled, I would have them. Yes they should have it, and, yes, I would have them.

Sure enough, some three weeks after Rosemary's disappearance, and just when I was about at the end of my tether, I received a most desirable letter, in good style, and obviously written by a person of education and experience.

This document set forth the terms on which I should receive Rosemary back, safe and sound. There were no vulgar threats or anything of that nature, but merely a plain and straightforward business offer.

I was assured that, on my completing my side of the bargain, my daughter, would be returned to me, and that I should never be molested again.

If, on the other hand, I failed to fulfill my part of the contract, I should never see my child again; and if she were recovered by the police and returned to me, the child would promptly be kidnaped again.

There was, as I have said, no threat of murder or injury, or anything of that sort, but merely the statement that if I wanted to recover, and to keep my child, I must fulfill their demands.

I quite agreed with the detectives to whom I showed the letter, that this was not one of the old-fashioned rags but a criminal or band of criminals of superior mentality, and therefore far more difficult to circumvent.

And there was further evidence of this in the demands themselves—which meant a colossal loss to me.

In the first place, they wanted our family diamond, known as The Unsetting Sun; and, in the second place, I was directed to purchase 100 other diamonds, each of the value of not less than $10,000.

Evidently the scoundrels had no intention of being traced by means of paper money bills or bonds.

They pointed out that the same date receipt by them of The Unsetting Sun would indicate my desire to recover my daughter, at the cost indicated, and would have a favorable effect on her health.

For the collection of the hundred diamonds, a fortnight would be allowed, and my daughter would be returned safely to me as soon as the kidnapers had satisfied themselves that the stones were genuine and of the stipulated value.

I was then most specially warned that if there were any "hanky-panky" of any kind, such as sending a model of The Unsetting Sun, and inferior or imitation diamonds, or if any one of the latter were estimated by their expert as being worth less than $10,000, my daughter would not be returned to me.

The writer went on to warn me against the childish stupidity of endeavoring to set any kind of trap.

The Unsetting Sun was to be posted in a registered parcel to a box-address in Chicago. The parcel would be mailed for by a messenger who would himself be instructed by an individual who knew neither the name nor the face of the writer of this letter.

The hundred diamonds were to be sent in a registered parcel, a fortnight later, to another box-address in New York, where they would again be collected by an innocent person utterly ignorant of the writer's identity.

It would, of course, be the simplest matter for the police to arrest the messenger directly he or she called for the parcel; but the arrested person could only lead them to another as innocent and ignorant as the actual messenger.

And though this second person be arrested, he would be unable to give any useful information, even if he wished to do so.

Eventually, an acute detective or a bullying third degree officer might possibly arrive at a person who knew something, but that person would not answer! And by that time where would the kidnaped child be?

After a careful study of this letter, I decided just to show it to the official police at all, for their object would naturally be to effect the arrest of a dangerous criminal, or criminals, and, incidentally, to recover my child, whereas my main desire was to get Rosemary back, and, incidentally and afterwards, to get the scoundrels who had kidnaped her.

And here I might tell you about this diamond, The Unsetting Sun.

My grandfather, who had a passion for precious stones, bought it for a fabulous sum, from a syndicate of Paris diamond merchants. It is one of the reputed "unlucky" stones.

Certainly, this diamond, The Unsetting Sun, had been the property of a number of remarkably unfortunate kings and queens, princes, and powers, as well as private individuals; and it is true that my grandfather, known in Wall Street and among his friends as "Lucky St. Clair" up to the time of his acquiring The Unsetting Sun, came to soon afterwards and thenceforth.

His wife was burnt to death in a disastrous fire which destroyed his marvelous home and he died a comparatively poor man—poor though still the proprietor of The Unsetting Sun, which nothing would induce him to sell.

He left the diamond to my father, on condition that he never sold it, but bequeathed it to his son in like
