SCHOOL OF HARD KNOCKS

The superiority of man, according to scientists of the Brush Foundation, arises from the fact that he is helpless for a longer time than other living things are.

Physically, at the start man gets a poor break. An ape is fully grown at five or six years of age. By that time it has all of the strength it will need, and it can fend for itself. Most animals become adults even sooner. But man has to go through some twenty years or more of youth before he is ready to step out into the world ready to cope with its problems.

Consequently man has had to make his intellect help him out. He has had to learn before he could settle down to live by habit. Being under this compulsion, he has made great progress. The terrific handicap of long helplessness has been his salvation.

This, at any rate, is the verdict of scientists, and it sets one's thoughts moving on an interesting path. It helps to confirm the old suspicion that a hardship can be a blessing in disguise. The school of hard knocks—in which man, in all generations, has been enrolled for the full course—can be extremely thorough.

There is nothing surprising in it, however. Misfortune has always been a spur to achievement. It is not by accident that the trail to the White House so often began in a log cabin; not by accident that the great ones of the earth so very, very frequently came from humble parents.

There is not a great gap between realizing this and accepting the devout, possibly old-fashioned, belief that misfortunes are "sent" into this world from above, for a purpose. It is evident that adversity is a better school than we generally like to admit.

PEDESTRIANS HUMAN BEINGS

The pedestrian is at last recognized as a creature with traffic rights. Heretofore the chief regulations of traffic have been in the interest of vehicular traffic. Everything has been done to expedite motor traffic, but the poor pedestrian has been left to save his own skin—or break his neck—when it comes to crossing the street.

The courts have ruled and cities are enacting traffic ordinances giving walkers the right of way over vehicles at intersections where there is no traffic officer or traffic control system. Drivers are required to slow down, or stop if necessary, in order to permit pedestrians to cross. In one city push buttons are being installed so that when a pedestrian desires to cross the street a red light is shown and remains until the pedestrian has had time to cross, when the signal automatically clears for vehicles to proceed.

This is a victory for the principle that walkers are human beings. If this ruling is enforced, drivers will no longer be able to bear down on innocent pedestrians and force them to leap like kangaroos or die the death of a traffic victim. And the time is fast approaching when something should be done to give pedestrians protection at intersections on Adams avenue.

Tobacco smoke kills insects. But you cannot get them to smoke.

In Washington

WASHINGTON — The disgust for the United States senate which Arthur Gould of Maine expressed when he quit that body March 4 is not shared by that other senator from the Pine Tree state.

For Fred Hale, a bachelor and a member of the senate since 1916, enjoys his job thoroughly.

A rather timid sort of person, somewhat short of stature and with closely cropped light hair, Hale comes of a family that long has been a power in national politics.

He is the son of one of the most powerful men ever to hold a seat in the United States senate. For 30 years his father, Eugene Hale, represented Maine in the senate. His grandfather, too, on the maternal side, was a senator as well as secretary of the interior.

Early the son was picked to succeed his father in politics. Graduating from Harvard, he spent one year in law school then quit to enter his uncle's law office in Portland.

POLITICAL VETERAN — He was associated with his uncle for a time in a law firm, and upon his death succeeded to his practice. Senator Hale's first venture into politics was in 1905 when he was elected to the Maine legislature. In 1916 he came to the senate and has been here ever since.

His career in Washington has been regularly republican with progressive

Death Reduces Ranks of Royal Family Of Spain

PARIS, APRIL 23 (AP) — The Infanta Isabella, aunt of Alfonso of Spain, died in a hospital here this afternoon. She was 80 years old.

The death today of the Infanta Isabella occurred after less than a week of exile, leaving Isabella in her private palace, not even telling her that the throne had fallen.

They knew she would not be disturbed in the confusion. The princess had seen the throne fall once before and when she heard the din outside her windows she demanded to know what it was all about.

Then they told her what had happened. Last Monday she crossed the frontier with Infanta Beatrice, sister of Queen Marie of Rumania, for Paris. She was desperately ill and her condition was aggravated by the excitement.

She made the trip by train and at Passaye, the border point where passengers change for Paris, she was carried from one train to the other on a stretcher.

She and Beatrice had an otherwise uneventful journey, but when Queen Isabella, dethroned in 1873 and she went with other members of the royal family into exile during the brief life of the Republic which was established then.

She was married in 1868 to Gaetan, Count de Girgen and Prince of Bourbon. He died in 1871.

AWAIT HOSS' RETURN — Decision as to what action the state board of control will take on the demand of Governor Julius L. Meier that Superintendent Henry Meyers of the Oregon penitentiary be dismissed on charges of incompetency as placed by the executive, is expected to be taken here later today upon the return of Secretary Hal E. Hoss from Portland.

The matter was discussed at a board meeting at which the Governor and Treasurer T. B. Kay were in attendance. The governor announced he was leaving at once for Portland, but that Hoss and Kay could record their votes as soon as they wished without his presence. The governor cast his vote for the immediate dismissal of Meyers. Kay did not vote, but said he would do so when Hoss is ready to announce his.

Hoss took the matter under advisement following the three-day hearing on charges against Meyers which ended Tuesday.

As a result of the hearing in which state officials were accused of accepting gifts from various institutions, as well as the governor charged with having his private car washed at the state penitentiary, the governor not only sent a check to the treasurer for $27 for what he had received and for payment for his car being washed, but he issued the following statement to heads of institutions:

"As a result of the recent penitentiary hearing, I have learned that it has been a common practice on the part of some or all of the heads of institutions supported by the state of Oregon to distribute to state officials products and articles raised or manufactured at state expense. These products and articles are paid for by the taxpayers and consequently are the property of the state of Oregon. Institution heads should exercise over them as strict a stewardship and demand as careful an accounting as if they were operating their own businesses.

"As chairman of the board of control, I want to say that during my administration I will not countenance practices of this sort which have apparently been prevalent in the past with the knowledge and consent of the board of control, and at the expense of the taxpayers."

The check which the governor paid to the general fund was for articles sent the governor which he said he assumed were from a private source. His payment covered the washing of his car ten times, one box apples, eight heads broccoli and two trucks.
