FARMERS WILL COMBAT MOVE AGAINST TAX

SALEM, April 25 (AP)—More than 800 representatives of farmers' unions of Western Oregon counties met in the house of representatives Friday for the purpose of organizing to combat the referendum movement against the 10 cent excise tax on oleomargarine. Eben Ray, head of the Polk county farmers' union presided as chairman.

The session was called by the Polk county organization and representatives from all dairy sections of the state were present.

The referendum move was started by the anti-food-tax league, represented by Mrs. Alexander Thompson, Portland. The organization today had for its purpose, urging farmers and dairymen to refrain from signing these petitions. The petitions must be signed by 10,000 voters in the state to place it on the ballot.

By Percival Christopher Wren Author of MYSTERIOUS WAY

CHAPTER 35
IN GANGLAND AGAIN
Save for the scud of our footsteps, all was as silent as the grave, and, within about a couple of hours of Guard Murphy's entrance to my cell at ten o'clock, I was driving the prison car, at 50 miles an hour, in the direction of the little quiet farmhouse that a worthy crook—who must remain nameless—had been keeping ready for me, commissioned by Uncle.

Here were clothes, food, drink, as well as money and a high-powered car. In this last matter and again drove off, leaving the prison car with our incriminating garments in it, locked in the garage.

A well-arranged fire, next day, burnt this garage (and its contents) to the ground. So well arranged indeed was the first that there was strong evidence that at least one convict had perished in it, charred portions of a warder's uniform and of a convict's dress being saved from the almost unrecognizable remains of a motor-car, and what appeared to be human bodies.

Our first drive had taken us nearly 300 miles from the prison, and our second one ended at Chicago, where we went to earth, and, say, any I started young, Master of the Game, with my blessing, earnest advice, and money to keep him until he could find work.

With Uncle's invaluable help, I lay low till my escape was forgotten in a new sensation, and tried to come to some decision as to what I should do next.

I had had enough of suffering, brutality and ugliness, and I yearned for a gracious and beautiful way of life—almost as much as I yearned for vengeance upon Rosemary's murderers.

I would escape from the country, take a long rest, and recover a measure of health and vigor.

I would live luxuriously abroad, and meanwhile my money should work for me—birthing the best brains in America for my work of vengeance. But the millionaire St. Clair was dead and must remain so—dead as the escaped convict, No. 45783.

Thus I planned and proposed—and found life too bitter to be borne... Dust and ashes in the mouth... I came near to suicide. My new descent into the underworld was in great measure due to a rather remarkable dream.

I dreamt that I was fishing in a great river; fishing from its rumbling bank, with a rod of gold, and it seemed that my bait was a great gold coin.

And, as so often happens to me in dreams, I felt foolish, inefficient, and convinced of unsuccess. While my very life seemed to depend upon my catching not merely fish, but certain particular fish, I knew that my task was hopeless, and that no fish would look at my bait.

I groaned aloud, and then prayed fervently, for help.

When, after ages of this hopeless labor, I was about to abandon my effort in despair, I realized that a man whom I recognized, one Williams H. William, was standing at my elbow.

"What do you know about seals?" he remarked cryptically, pointing to the seal ring which I wore upon the little finger of my right hand.

And, nodding encouragingly, he folded up his Cheesier-ent-like smile and stole silently away.

Williams H. William, one of the cleverest private detectives who ever lived, and whom I had employed before, put an end to my life as John Dacre Wayne Vandercuir St. Clair, the millionaire, had said something, as usual.

What did I know about seals? Winding in my line, I dived headlong into the water. Instantly became a seal and, a moment later, was pursuing fish in their own element.

In the very act of opening widely my jaws, that they might meet deep in the quivering flesh of a sinister fish that fled before me, I awoke. Idly pondering the dream next day, I saw its meaning, returned to

American, and, as I have said, plunged again into the foul river of crime, once more to be with, but not of, its denizens, and to pursue certain of them in their natural element.

The full story of my life in the guise of a criminal inhabitant of the underworld of crooks would be as wearisome to read as it was to live. Like war, it was, after the first few weeks, a monotony of boredom, rarely broken by brief periods of swift violent danger.

Let me say at once that, clever as I thought myself, and devilish relentless, implacable and determined as I was, I should have had no success but for the help of those much cleverer people than myself—this same Williams H. William and his partner, that amazing character known to most of the crooks of America, and to all those of Chicago, as "Uncle."

Williams H. William... and never, never, if you should chance to meet him or write to him, make the—by him—unforgivable mistake of addressing him as William H. William.

As he would indignantly and accurately point out to you, any dog-gone fool could be William H. William. He was some one, and something very different indeed, unique in fact—Williams H. William, to wit.

This remarkable man had started life as a traveling salesman, in which capacity his marvelous gift of tongues (or the gab), his ingratiating manner, his resource and indefatigable tenacity, must have stood him in excellent stead. Later he had—and I do not wonder at it—become an actor, and through training on the stage, his remarkable natural gifts were augmented by the acquired ones of impersonation, mimicry, and disguise.

By the time he gave up acting, to follow his real bent as a private detective, he was well equipped indeed. As a detective, his favorite and most useful role was that of a hopeless, helpless, yet cheerful, hopeful, and hopelessly drunk, besotted and bemused to understand a word he heard, or to remember it if he heard it.

In the use of this particular disguise of his alibi, clever and courageous self, he was assisted by a plump face, congested cheeks of an ugly and unwholesome color and appearance, and a real drunkard's nose.

In point of fact he was, by preference and conviction, a teetotaler, and he only drank when it was necessary to the part which he was playing.

No actor on any stage ever gave a finer performance than did Williams H. William in the part of a drunken British Officer, the diplomatically Colonel Campbell, self-interested for cure, in a certain Nursing-Home of which I shall tell later.

A scarcely less interesting and remarkable person than this Williams H. William was his wife. She, too, had been an actress, and, judging by her performances in private life, must have been a remarkably good one.

They were a devoted couple, and it was because they would otherwise be separated for a considerable portion of each year that they decided to relinquish the modest but growing success which they had achieved, and tempt fortune afresh in this new walk of life.

I personally did my best to give them reason's bliss the day whereon they made the decision. I employed them for years, paid them highly, and, in the end, endeavored to give them a reward commensurate with my gratitude.

For, without them, my efforts would have been in vain; and to their cleverness, fidelity and courage I owe such measure of success as I have achieved.

They worked together, and their combined value as a pair was certainly three times as great as would have been the value of either of them working alone. Each was the complement of the other, each was as fit to the other's steel; and no finer pair of naturally and artificially gifted detectives ever worked together.

Greatly as I admired Williams H. William's art, in the part of Colonel Campbell at the English Nursing-Home, I am not sure that I did not admire, even more, the acting of his wife, in the part of Miss Skinner, a neurotic, unbalanced youngish old-maid, an inveterate mischief-maker and scandal-monger, afflicted with a persecution-mania and all its unpleasant cognates.
