English Eyes On Greenland, Where Explorer Is Lost

By W. W. Chaplin (Associated Press Staff Writer) LONDON, April 29 (AP)—The warm spring sun here today but English eyes turned from the beauty of their own country to Greenland's icy mountains where one of England's sons was marooned in desperate need of help being carried to him through the air.

Among those most anxious for the young explorer, Augustine Courtland, the son of a millionaire British artificial silk manufacturer, is the beautiful young aviator, who became engaged to Courtland before he joined the British Arctic air route expedition in July.

Courtland's parents returned from American territory, having kept in touch by wireless with relief plans during their crossing of the Atlantic. Another anxious one is Courtland's sister, who is engaged to Captain Ralph Rayner, organizer of a relief expedition which is going to Courtland's aid.

All England Absorbed—They were watching the rescue efforts most closely, but all England is absorbed. Courtland was lost while helping to survey an all-British air route between England and Canada.

High hopes are pinned to the Ahrensberg flight for the Swedish pilot will have the first chance to reach the isolated spot where Courtland voluntarily spent the winter alone, expecting to be relieved by an expedition which started a month ago but failed to reach him.

Should Ahrensberg fail, there is still another hope, for a ship has left Iceland with another plane which a British pilot will fly inland from the edge of Greenland's ice.

Junior Play To Be Presented At L. H. S. Tonight

After two successful matinees given for the benefit of the grade school children, four "Daddies" are ready to exert their parental authority and show everybody just how children should be raised. The four "Daddies," in a play by that name, will appear tonight at 8:15 at the La Grande High school auditorium aided by an able cast picked from the junior class, which is presenting the play.

Indications are that the cast will perform before a full house both this evening and Friday evening at 8:15 o'clock when the second performance will be given.

Miss Catherine Sartain is directing the production and in her usual manner has worked out the staging and voice intonations to the minutest detail, so that the play, after two public performances, and several private and dress rehearsals, is expected to be acted with finesse.

The play is made up of a minimum of action and the wit, which is the predominant characteristic of the production, is embodied in the repartee of the children and their adopted parents. There is a laugh in practically every line, and the costumes of the children are very attractive, with the boys dressed in blouses and huge Windsor ties, and the girls sporting hairbows and hair boxes.

Tickets are on reserve now and are still available at Glass Drugs.
