MOSCOW (Special) — Soviet Russia's red army of 600,000 well-fed and well-clothed fighters is to become a part of moving picture romance. Vsevolod Pudovkin, leading communist movie director, who has made such pictures as "Storm Over Asia," "Mother" and "The End of St. Petersburg," now is preparing for production a series of photoplays based on the communist combat troops.

"The Red army is a source of much film material," said Pudovkin. "There is all sorts of drama in the organization. I intend to make a series of five or six dramas, each of some nine or ten thousand feet in length. Will there be any propaganda in these films? Well, of course, all of our pictures, to a certain extent, expound the communist ideology."

The new Pudovkin series will not be of the talkie type. They will have sound effects, however. Pudovkin is not against the "talkies," but he believes that for universal appeal the "silents" will continue.

Pudovkin has never been to America, but he hopes some day to achieve this adventure, although he has no special urge for Hollywood.
