National Guard To Stage Military Spectacle

Rocket Voyagers To Moon Better Carry Stoves Along

A vast range of temperature is shown by the moon's full face. At the bright spot in the lower center the temperature is 214 degrees Fahrenheit. At the lower edge, in the dark, the temperature is 60 below.

By Robert H. Baker
(Professor of Astronomy, University of Illinois)

URBANA, Ill. (AP)—Studying the face of the moon as it appeared at its full phase a few days ago, we recall reading of proposed trips to its surface, in vehicles propelled by rocket motors, or in some other way.

At the comfortable speed of a hundred miles an hour, this trip would require only three months. And a radio message of the safe arrival could be transmitted to stations on the earth in one and one-third seconds. So far the trip seems attractive.

Astronomers at the Mount Wilson observatory have recently completed measurements of temperatures at the moon's surface. They find at the center of the disk of the full moon a temperature of 214 degrees; the rocks just there are slightly hotter than the ordinary boiling point of water.

Toward the edge of the moon's disk it becomes cooler, and finally much colder. Near the edge, which at the full moon is the sunrise or sunset line, the thermometer reads 60 degrees below zero. And on the other side, where it is night, the temperature is as low as 250 degrees below zero.

From day to night on the moon the temperature may drop from the boiling point of water to the point at which air with us becomes liquid. But on the moon there is neither water to boil nor air to liquify.

LOS ANGELES, May 8 (AP)—Friends of Mrs. Minnie "Ma" Kennedy say the her serious illness is caused by a broken heart over her split of some months ago with Mrs. Almee Semple McPherson.

"Mother grieves constantly for her daughter and repeatedly says she wants to die. Now that Almee does not love her," said Miss Essie Ledy, former Angelus temple worker who withdrew and started a religious organization of her own.

"When Robert, Mrs. McPherson's daughter, was married in the Orient she was dreadfully hurt because she was not notified. It has just been piling up and now mother has broken under the strain. She should be in a hospital but remains in the house across the street from the temple because she wants to be there when Almee returns."

Mrs. McPherson suffered a nervous breakdown following the quarrel with her mother and other difficulties at the temple. She has made two voyages on which she unsuccessfully attempted to travel incognito. She is due back from her present world cruise May 16.

Mrs. Kennedy and her daughter have had several breaks and reconciliations in their eventful careers. A complete breakfast was sent by plane recently from New York to the her serious illness is caused by a

Having in mind the remarkable achievements of science, one would scarcely venture to predict that a successful crossing to the moon can never be accomplished. Engineering difficulties may well be overcome, and means may be found for providing a supply of air, as well as food and water. Chance encounters with swiftly moving meteors would have to be reckoned as one of the hazards of a dangerous trip.

For the astronomer a station on the moon's surface would offer conditions for observing the heavens far superior to the most favorable site on the earth. The lunar sky is always cloudless, and the view is so clear and steady that very high magnifying powers could be employed successfully. Then, too, the stars could be seen in the daytime full as well as at night. The moon is the ideal location for a great telescope.
