OUT OUR WAY

Frosty School Is Closed on Friday

By Mrs. Nell Kight (Observer Correspondent)

LOWER COVE, Ore. (Special)—Miss Vera Cove closed a successful week of school at Frosty on Friday. After examinations were over the teacher and pupils with their parents, enjoyed a winter and marshmallow roast, beside a lovely stream on the E. S. Morris farm. Ice cream and cake were served later by Mrs. E. S. Morris and Mrs. Lee Childers.

Farmers are enjoying the rain as it was needed. Crops are in fine condition.

Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Johnson motored to Weiser, Idaho on Thursday to attend the annual meeting and picnic of the Farmers' Co-operative Creamery association.

J. C. Roup, of Astoria, Wash., came over Friday for his niece, Miss Lillian Kight, who has spent the last school year with her cousin, N. P. Kight. They left for Astoria on Saturday morning.

Harlan Koger was a business visitor in La Grande Saturday afternoon.

N. P. Kight and family were business visitors in La Grande Saturday.

Mrs. E. E. Miller was a business visitor in La Grande on Friday.

Mt. Glen Personals

By Mrs. E. D. Whitting (Observer Correspondent)

MT. GLEN (Special)—Miss Buyrie Hibbert, of Salt Lake City, is spending a week of her summer vacation with her brother, Dr. Leo Hibbert, of Mt. Glen, and her sister, Mrs. Osmond Orton, of Union. Miss Hibbert was a resident of Union county for several years and is now a high school teacher in Parowan, Utah.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence DeGraw entertained a number of friends at a dinner party Sunday honoring Mr. DeGraw's mother.

Albert Folk and daughter, Aonora, are visiting relatives in Council Idaho.

A daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Zaugg last Wednesday and on Thursday a son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Paul Zaugg.

The mothers of the community were honored on Mother's day by the Sunday school. A program of songs, musical numbers and eulogies to motherhood was given and each mother was given a beautiful booklet of verses by a group of Boy Scouts.

Mrs. Martha Whiting was the oldest mother present and Mrs. Helen Zaugg the youngest.

Mr. and Mrs. Matt Peters and son, Richard, of La Grande, spent Sunday afternoon at the farm of E. D. Whitting.

Eugene Hibbert is recovering from an attack of acute appendicitis.

Davis L. Stoddard, of Baker, is having an addition built on his summer home at his timber ranch north of Mt. Glen. Charles Spiker is in charge of the work.

Albert Perkins and family moved to Cove recently. He has rented a house and small trace of land near the city.

Mr. Gilliam has rented the Garner farm and is planting the place to potatoes.

John W. Wilde and Vernal Nielson, of Union, were speakers at the church Sunday. The service was in charge of a group of young men who gave most of the program.

A successful school year was closed Friday. Miss Genevieve Nelson will teach the school next year. Also, pupils wrote for eighth grade examination diplomas. Donna Folk, Eldon Walt and Ralph McCoy. The school will have its annual outing at the Cove swimming pool Wednesday.

Joe Leak has furnished several lambs to the boys' club of the county. This flock is said to be one of the best in Eastern Oregon.

Briefly Told
One achievement leads to another accomplishment, one failure results in another failure. So it is imperative to stick to the thing one is trying to do until it is done.

MAD PURSUIT

BY JESSIE DOUGLAS FOX

Chapter 9
MAN PROPOSES?

MAGDALENA got down the breakfast tray with a bump. She smiled down at Nora, the golden hoops swinging beside her olive cheeks. She began to explain all the violent happenings of the last few days. Magdalena groaned and hung her arms up, made the sign of the cross and cradled something in her arms. There was another baby somewhere; but whether it was the baby of her mother, Nora never knew. Then Magdalena kissed Nora's hand and thumped out on her sturdy peasant feet.

Nora put the tray on the table and drew it up beside the window. She drank the tepid coffee and ate rolls with a lusty young appetite. She loved her funny little room, the old chest of drawers, the mirror in its tarnished gilt frame. Everything seemed charming this morning.

—How would he look at her?

When she had drunk the last drop of coffee and eaten the crumbs of her rolls, she drew out a battered diary and began to flutter through the pages. It was a long time since she had made an entry.

Here they were—those old chapters of her wandering life with Julian... here and there, never satisfied, always hopping.

She read over a few of them.

Oct. 7
Saw acres of Oxford. Stole into Fanny's garden. Rose and I and Julia met Englishman in Inn. Terrible fight. Julian very drunk. Woke me in the night to say he was going to cut fellow's throat. Left Oxford in morning.

Nov. 2
Frosts. Rain all day. Julian very wet. Borrowed two pounds. Leaving at once.

Feb. 20
Villa Augustin. Lime trees. Sunshin. Son, Julian, feels he can work a little. He is painting. Did not like it. Julian drank all night. Going to stab him with knife and fork.

She began to write:

April 12
Nicholas Thayer arrived. Most unpleasant. But after you knew him.

There was a light tap on her door. She tucked the book under her pillow and turned as her father came into the room. He looked very well pleased with himself, clean shaven, his dark hair brushed in its crest, a flowing black top under his chin. He atraddled a chair and grinned at her.

"Well, Nora, my own, how are you? I've good news for you!" he said gaily.

"Have we come into a fortune?"

He pulled out a cigarette from a flat tortoiseshell case and lighted it. Nora noticed for the first time that he was nervous. She thought, "He's in a hole. He doesn't know how to tell me."

"You might as well tell me at once, Julian!"

"I spent the afternoon yesterday with Helen Nevra. And the truth is—the fact is—" he inhaled a great breath of smoke and thung back his head, "I'm going to marry her."

She could not say a word. She felt a suffocating emotion take possession of her.

"Well, aren't you going to congratulate me?" her father asked airily. "It's the best thing that ever happened to us, Nora. She has enough money, and a place at St. Jean de Luz and she loves to wander about just as I do. Besides she's a charming woman!" her father added when he saw her eyes pitilessly on him.

He went on in an aggrieved tone. "Here on the happiest day of my life you're going to sit like a clod. You're jealous!" he cried in triumph.

"Perhaps I am," Nora admitted.

"This isn't like you, I can't understand you at all!"

She was not glad. She was confused and angry and hurt. She loved her father, but she despised him a little and pitied him more. But suddenly she realized what it meant: She was free. She was ashamed as this feeling surged through her. Her face lightened, she held out her hand like a boy, and he grasped it.

"There, I know you'd see it as I do. She's always admired me. I saw that the first time I met her. We've even decided about you. Whatever we do you're to come. You'll find she's a charming woman as you know her better." Her father rambled on while Nora got looking at him. Did he think that she would let Mrs. Nevra support her and go trawling after them all over Europe? Her face young pride rose up in arms.

How could Julian think that she would let Mrs. Nevra dispose of her life in this way? Her rebellion flamed into words of protest.

"But I couldn't, Julian. You must see that. Not on her money!"

"But it will be my money then!"

He stood up. "I'll tell her that you're delighted, Nora."

"No, tell her that I give my consent."

"Splendid!" he laughed, "splendid!"

She heard her father run down the stairs; the door banged after him. He was going through the blue gate. Her life was changed in the twinkling of an eye.

She was free now. She tried to recapture that first sharp thrill of freedom but that was dulled by fear. For she felt desolate as though a child whom she had loved and watched over had been snatched from her. Henceforth Helen Nevra and not herself would be responsible for him.

What a terrible thing it was to be penniless! She thought of ways and means. But of whom could she borrow money, Nicholas... she stood up and went to the window. She saw a man climbing the hillside; something in his swaggering walk made her think it was Nicholas.

She flew out of the house and followed the narrow path that led up the hill to the chestnut trees. She topped the hill and saw his figure clear against the sky; then he dropped down into the valley and she went more slowly in pursuit. When she reached him she saw he was leaning back against one of the chestnut trees, his legs stretched straight before him.

He was not at all as she had thought of him. The unsparing light showed his face older, more seamed, with a grayish pallor on the cheeks. He looked up as though she had interrupted him when he came to sit timidly at some distance from him.

"What's the matter?" he asked, frowning.

"Julian is going to marry Mrs. Nevra."

"Yes?"

"He told you?"

"Last night."

He looked at her keenly as he added, "You don't like Mrs. Nevra?"

"No, I hate her!" she said, a sob almost bursting from her.

"And you'd do anything to get away?"

"Anything!" she whispered.

He took his pipe out of his pocket and an old skin bag of tobacco. He packed it awkwardly with his left hand. She watched him in silence until he motioned that she draw closer to him. She waited, her arms about her knees, staring down the hillside with its pallid olive trees, and off to the brilliant sky.

"I had pleasant news too, this morning," he said in a matter-of-fact voice. "Dr. Madron tells me I'll never see my hand again. Paralysis," his face contorted with the last word into a grimace.

It was as though all the familiar things she knew were gone. She had stepped off into some lonely place where he and she were shut in by pain.

"If I hadn't asked you to open the shutter—"

"If I had!" he said violently. "If I hadn't met your father at the pension, if I hadn't come to stay with him, if the land hadn't been there."

"But some doctor can do something."

"Those fools of doctors!"

"You'll find some one to cure you."

"I haven't your belief in the kindness of... God," he said bitterly.

A tear ran crookedly down her cheek and slipped into the throat of her dress. She leaned toward him: "Would you take me with you? Would you take me home?"

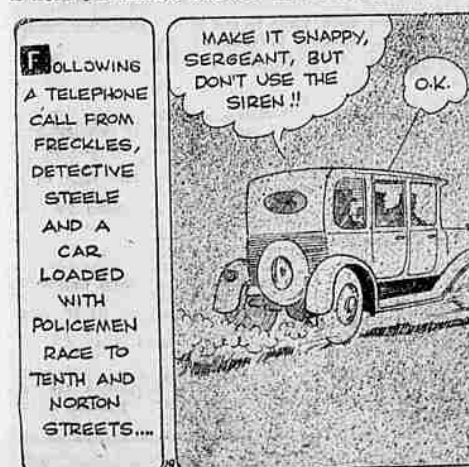

Was she as innocent as she seemed or was she a bold little adventurer? Knowing her father he could believe it only too well, but looking at her white face he knew she was not brazen but desperate.

"Do you mean would I marry you?" he asked brutally.

Can money cost too much, as Nicholas suggests tomorrow? Perhaps that is why Nora's trip to Naples isn't a joy-ride.
