Profits from Illinois Football Build Skating Rink for Students

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP)—Profits from varsity football will pay for a $300,000 indoor ice skating rink which the University of Illinois will open next November.

The rink, long a dream of Athletic Director George Huff, is now under construction. It will be housed in a brick and stone building 208 by 141 feet, with a 53 by 108-foot service wing.

The skating arena will measure 125 by 193, the concrete floor being criss-crossed by some 80,000 feet of imbedded piping, leaving a surface adaptable for other purposes during non-skating months.

Skating will become one of the required activities in physical education, and invitational hockey will be introduced.

Intercollegiate hockey now played by three Big Ten schools—Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota—is a possibility, but Director Huff is emphatic that the primary purpose of the rink is to provide winter recreation for students who otherwise would not get it and that varsity hockey will not be permitted to usurp the rink.

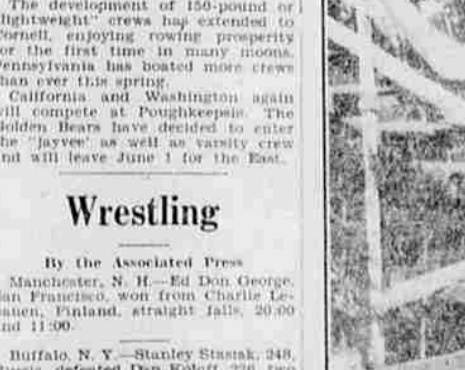

A spectators' gallery accommodating 1300 is included in the plans, while the service wing will contain check-rooms, rest rooms, store rooms, first aid rooms, lunch room and skate-sharpening department.

STANLEY SARGENT WINS PORTLAND, May 20 (AP)—Stanley Sargent, Vancouver, Wash., middleweight won by a knockout over last night in one of the first round matches designed to pick the champion middleweight of Oregon.

Other results: Ray McQuillan, 129, Denver negro, decision over Rocky Smith, 161, Portland. Pete Ritter, 162, Vancouver, Wash., decision over Cowboy Brooks, 162, Dallas, Tex.

Got Julius L. Mier of Oregon vetoed bills appropriating $626,925.56 during the last session of the legislature.

This Game of Golf

By O. B. Kuefer So far as I am aware, this small phenomenon is a new discovery. I never had heard it suggested before, even as a theory.

Driving out to the Flintridge country club the other morning with Bobby Jones, I asked him if he had ever tested the time a golf ball would stay in the air from a full shot.

I was thinking about the Gay Nineties, when the Messrs. Tall, father and son, conducted experiments in ballistics, shooting golf balls into large revolving disks covered with clay, and finally, explaining why marking on the cover of a golf ball were necessary to enable the spin, with which any properly struck ball is charged, to take hold of the air and thus control the flight in a trajectory which only the golf ball can follow.

Timing Bobby's Drives Mr. Jones replied that he had done drives timed, and that the ball, from a full stroke with the big wood club, remained in the air just six seconds.

This was interesting, because the old gutta-percha ball, from the full stroke with the driver 30 years ago, also remained in the air just six seconds, though it traveled only about 70 or 75 per cent as far in the air as the more resilient modern rubber-core.

Considering this coincidence, I asked Bobby if he ever had timed the flight of the ball from other clubs, on a full shot. He said no. So I suggested that the ball might remain in the air as long from other clubs as from the driver, while not going so far.

Mr. Jones fancied there might be something in this, and after reaching the course we tried it. I had a steep watch.

CLOCKLIKE GOLF Bobby already knew what the driver would do. So he tried his No. 1 or "big spoon."

The ball remained in the air just six seconds, shot after shot, with the normal trajectory. He tried a towering shot, one that was too high—freak shot. The flight lasted 5 2-5 seconds. Normal spoon shots all seemed to be exactly six seconds.

Bobby tried a big iron. Six seconds. He tried a masher, niblick, hitting the ball hard, so that it carried 150 to 155 yards, rather more than he expects of this implement. Six seconds in the air.

We did not try the intermediate irons or the niblick, but it seems perfectly reasonable to assume that all the clubs, properly swung for a full shot, will support the ball in flight the same period of time.

The niblick pitch would fly about half as far as the driving shot; but the ball would fly higher and move more slowly, and be more emphatically supported by backspin.

Sylvanus P. Jerniman of Toledo—president of the Toledo District Golf association, and known as the "Father of Golf" in that fair city—wrote Bobby Jones and me a kindly letter not long ago, following one of our radio broadcasts in which we talked about the Inverness club, where the national open championship of 1920 was played, and where the same classic will be played again this summer.

We had considered the 18th hole, at Inverness, for one thing—recalling how, in the qualifying rounds of his first open championship, Bobby had used 6 strokes there to a birdie 3 for Harry Vardon, with whom he was paired.

Mr. Jerniman, who loves the great club course dearly, had an interesting story to tell concerning the 18th hole; a theory which is likely to be useful to many a contestant in the approaching tournament.

BLAND AND TRICKY The 18th hole at Inverness is a beautiful one, as Mr. Jerniman explains in a deceptive affair.

"It has a really remarkable psychology all the way from the tee," he says. "It does not look severe—far from it! As you stand upon the tee every prospect pleases. But alluring disaster lurks all the way until the ball is safely at the bottom of the cup."

Even when the drive is perfectly placed—as both Bobby's and Vardon's were that August day in 1920—the said psychology gets in its most effective work. The green, which stands up before you like a big round dining table, seems to require that the ball be pitched high and dropped thereon like the proverbial poshoned egg.

As a matter of fact, the shot does not require a great deal of cut or backspin. A plain pitch, or even a decent pitch-and-run, of the commonplace sort suitable for any green, will serve the turn very well. Yet at Inverness we have capable veteran golfers who have been playing that green since they were wearing short pants—and remain the victims of the optical illusion to this day."

Of course, the conviction that great control and plenty of backspin must be involved in the shot is productive of frequent calamity at this very hole. It is played by the big fellows with a drive and a medium masher-niblick pitch; the green is ample in size. Shake-Up Held Likely In Cubs' Lineup Shortly

By Paul Mickelson (Associated Press Sports Writer) CHICAGO, May 20 (AP)—Chicago's Cubs only a few weeks ago the toast of the city, today were the "roast" of the town.

They have failed abjectly on their current road trip and the fans, who started to forget all about Manager Joe McCarthy when they dashed away from the 1931 National league barry like a twenty grand, are back booing and predicting all kinds of turmoil in the front office.

There is considerable doubt as to any "turnover" in the Wrigley office today but there isn't much doubt but that Manager Rogers Hornsby would be called on to give his version of "what's wrong with the Cubs" when he confers with his chiefs Saturday.

There isn't much doubt either but that he will be requested to shake the dust from the bottom of his cap, to put it back in the pennant race.

The "raja" will bring his team, loser in six out of seven games so far on the eastern invasion, back to Chicago Saturday and will go into a huddle with the Cub bosses almost as soon as he returns.

As far as newspapers, traveling with the club, can determine, rumors or personal disputes between the "raja" and his players have been as untrue as they have been numerous.

In almost every city they have visited, reports have filtered back and forth that Hornsby and some of the players, usually Hack Wilson, had quarreled. Each rumor was denied only to be revived in some other city, where it was denied again and so on.

But, a veteran Cub fan, who has followed the Bruins for years through despair and hope and glory, reflected: "Pretty good on the whole. Why a year ago they were in fifth place, and now they are in fourth with all their hard luck."

Lucky Bounce I recall the topsy-turphy with a curious clearness—also the evident intent of the majority of the competitors to smack that ball up there with plenty of backspin, which often resulted in a shot not sufficiently missed to bring trouble.

Flipping the hole for the last time in the tournament, Bobby Jones displayed the apprehension suggested by Mr. Jerniman. He sent up a very steep pitch, which came down short of the bunker in front of the green, bounded over the bunker, and rolled up fairly close. This saved the youngster.

A plain pitch, or even a decent pitch-and-run, of the commonplace sort suitable for any green, will serve the turn very well.
