Empty War Cradles Bring Hard Years

PARIS (AP)—The empty cradles of world war days will begin to make themselves felt in the 1934 economic life of France.

It has been figured out that there were 1,500,000 fewer children born in the war years than would otherwise have been the case.

The boys and girls who did come into the world in those days will reach the age of 20 during the years 1935-39 inclusive.

Production is expected to be weakened during those years.

The number of youth available for military service also will be fewer.

Economists and military writers agree that these will be difficult years for France.

AMELIA AT RENO

RENO, Nev., June 6 (AP) — Amelia Earhart Putnam, flying an autogyro, arrived here at 8 a. m. today after having been forced by lack of gasoline to spend the night at Lovelock, 90 miles east of Reno.

Russians are reported reprinting American books without permission. In their determination, perhaps, to become a well Red people.

Exposition Will Be Held In '36 In Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, Ore., June 6 (Special) —Plans are being made already for the Beaver Centennial world's exposition of 1936, to be held in Portland. The celebration is to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the arrival of the first two American white women (Mrs. Narcissa Whitman and Mrs. Eliza Spalding) to cross the plains and Rocky mountains into the Pacific Northwest, also the arrival of the first steamship (the Beaver) to come up the Columbia river. The Beaver holds the distinction, also, of being the first steamship to cross the Atlantic ocean, steam around Cape Horn, and then visit the Pacific coast.

Under the fair program, the main Centennial grounds, wherever they may be located, will act, in effect, the same as an index to a book. Every county of the three states of Oregon, Washington and Idaho would have its own county fair with detailed exhibits, but the main Centennial would have enough exhibits of each county so arranged in display as to interest every individual who may come to the fair, and through the program encourage the visitors to visit the various counties with the hope they will settle in Oregon, Washington or Idaho permanently.

A roll-of-honor financing plan has been worked out with the finances secured through individuals donating $100 as preliminary expense money, and in addition, at some later time receive their donation back plus a reasonable amount of interest. The roll of honor will be placed in the corner-stone of the permanent building of the Centennial administration, according to B. R. Perkins, general supervisor of the exposition.

The News Used To Be

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO
(From Observer, Wed., June 6, 1906)

COVE PERSONALS

By Mrs. A. G. Conklin
(Observer Correspondent)

COVE, Ore. (Special)—Mel Fuller, an old-time resident of Cove, spent one night here last week as he was on his way to his home in South Dakota after visiting his son in California. He lived here as a boy about 35 years ago on what was then known as the Campbell place, now owned by A. V. Fisher. This is his first visit in all these years and at this time there are but a few of the people left who were then residents of Cove. He visited Mrs. Lou Payne, L. D. Sutherland and Mrs. Juliet Dougherty.

Rev. and Mrs. P. F. Sturges are very happy over the arrival of a daughter in their home.

Mr. and Mrs. Thos. F. Towle and three children returned Tuesday from Vancouver, Wash., where they had visited for the last ten days.

Lloyd Mills has registered for the summer school for church workers beginning June 8.

Rev. William Murray Bradner, of Boston, Mass., reached Cove Friday night after having visited Baker, Ontario, Vale, Nyssa, Pendleton, La Grande, Hood River and The Dalles. He will be here until the close of summer school. He is chaplain of the school and will give a course or lectures on "Jesus and Life's Problems." He will conduct the morning service at the Ascension Episcopal church Sunday, June 7. Mr. Bradner was honor guest at a breakfast given by Mrs. A. G. Conklin Saturday morning. Other guests were Rev. S. W. Creasey, Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Conklin, Clarice Gale Conklin and A. C. Conklin.

Mr. and Mrs. Guy Bridges, of Walla Walla, Wash., are expected to spend a couple of months in Cove. They will camp at Camp Yew Bow. Mr. Bridges is a nephew of Mrs. Loy Payne who will spend a part of the summer with them.

Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Monahan and two sons, of Freewater, and Mrs. Monahan's mother, of Los Angeles, were in Cove Thursday as guests of Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Hefty. Mr. Monahan is looking into the cherry situation and reports the crop very poor in all the sections he visited, with about half a normal crop expected.

The school board met for the last regular meeting before the annual meeting June 15 to complete the year's work. The members decided to get the services of someone to keep the lawn watered that has lately been set to shrubbery. There will be a vacancy on the school board at the annual meeting as the chairman, Karl J. Stackland, is not a candidate for re-election.

The city council renewed the contract for the city lights at the regular meeting Tuesday evening.

Mrs. Joe Goyette and Mrs. R. S. French entertained the Ladies Guild at the home of the former Thursday afternoon. Four tables of bridge were at play. Guests aside from members were Mrs. Melvin Marks, Mrs. Stuart French, Mrs. Ethel Hansen, of La Grande, Miss Emma Hackman, Mrs. Alice Trippeet, and Miss Lola Martin.

MAD PURSUIT

BY JESSIE DOUGLAS FOX

SYNOPSIS: Nora Lake finds sympathy and understanding at the home of her Aunt Emily after the suicide of her husband, Nicholas Thayer. The girl, conscious of the reproaches of Nicholas' brother, Jonathon, and his stepsister, Damon, accepts their invitation to live with them. But the scolding of her cousin Frances' child delays Nora's departure for the Thayer place, and when Damon and her father leave on a vacation, Nora fears she is doomed to remain in her aunt's middle-class household. However, Jon, who alternately attracts and repels her, repeats the invitation. Meanwhile the penniless Nora has started work in the office with Frances, concerning whose rough young Dr. Mors is solicitous. Suddenly Nora's father, whom she had left in Italy, appears.

Chapter 22

BENEATH LOVE'S MASK

JULIAN Lake took off his hat with a flourish as Nora opened the door.

"Julian!" she cried half in dismay and half in delight as she hugged him.

"I had the devil of a time finding this place!" he cried, "and what a dingy hole in the wall!"

On the steps beside him were a great collection of canvases that he lifted carefully inside as he went on, "Have my relatives sunk so low—"

"Julian, Julian," she said trying to quiet him. "They'll hear you!"

But his voice filled all the little spaces of the house with its mellow timbre.

He eyed Nora comically, "What have they done to you, my girl? You look respectable, by gad! One of the smug bourgeoisie! Where are they, my splendid family?" Julian asked and as Nora made a gesture toward the backstairs, he ran gayly down.

As they crowded about him Nora saw how he dominated the scene. Fran brought back the carcass of the chicken, Hallie hobbled in with a plate of biscuits, Nora poured a cup of coffee. Julian began to tell them with relish of his trip home.

"Do you remember the Marchese Baldassare, Nora? A charming old woman with a very warm heart. She insisted on paying my passage home, Steerage to be sure. And I hadn't a sou after the passage was paid. On the boat I got up a concert for disabled mariners and passed the hat around myself. I did very well," Julian ended, grinning delightfully.

Nora saw Jon's expression, amused, skeptical, but drawn into the circle of her father's willful charm. Alice lifted adoring eyes to this strange fascinating man.

Julian demolished the chicken, finished the last biscuit on the plate, drank the last drop of coffee, continuing as he did so to tell stories that had the probability of Baron Munchausen's.

"But now," said Julian with sudden seriousness, "I have a plan that is to bring us fame and fortune." His eyes rested speculatively on Jon's face. "It only needs the backing of some rich man."

Nora quailed at these words. She saw her father as Jon must see him. The suit he wore looked as though it had been slept in, the dark flowing tie gave him a shabby touch of burlesque. She could not bear it if Jon were laughing at him. But Jon's face was inscrutable.

"Let me show you some things I brought back with me," Julian said, singling Jon out from the company.

She heard them go upstairs. She stood, restlessly moving about. Fergus smiled at her. "I think your father's great, Nora," he said.

It was like a sudden handclasp, and she understood for the first time why Fran liked this shabby young doctor.

She went, reassured, to join Jon and her father. It only Julian would say nothing more about needing money. But his words as she entered the back parlor smote her with fear.

"—an artist must be free from thought of money. If he is to do his best work—"

"Julian," Nora interrupted breathlessly. "You must show me some of your pictures—"

Jon was standing up now and he told her easily that he had to go. Nora watched him saying good-by to Aunt Em, telling her how he had enjoyed the dinner party. As Jon said good-by she seemed to catch a fleeting glimpse of her father through Jon's eyes. A battered old showman not to be taken seriously. For Jon was shrewdly aware of those who wished to use him for his money. He knew that Julian Lake had singled him out for this purpose; though no word had been spoken.

As Jon took her hand she saw his compassion for her. It stung her to the quick. Jon said in a lowered voice, "When Damon comes home—" but they were interrupted by her father's flamboyant farewell.

Nora felt in that moment the finality of Jon's good-by. This was not his world. He might be amused at it, but he could never enter it. Nora felt all this with pain and pride. She wanted to hold him with a last word; to cling to him. But she stood proudly silent as he ran down the steps.

When Nora returned to the dining room she heard her father chuckling to himself.

"Oh Julian, how could you? How could you?" she cried.

Her father stared at her in astonishment.

"What did I do?"

"You let him know that you wanted money. That he could help you!"

"Why not, my darling? We belong to the free people who don't need houses and stocks and bonds to make us proud!"

"Proud?" she echoed.

Nora sat down at the table before the carcass of the chicken, with the empty dishes all about it. The candles were making a sucking noise as they guttered down in pools of wax. She looked at him, her face shadowed by weariness.

She could never make him understand. She was bitterly humiliated.

"Why do you think I came home, Nora?"

She looked at him sorrowfully.

He cried, "To make our fortune!"

"How?" she asked listlessly.

"Leave all that to me. But this time you're going to be proud of me, I have a plan . . ." He walked about delighted with himself, but he would tell her no more.

"You don't believe me, do you?"

He rushed out and brought in something that he unwrapped carefully. It was one of his paintings.

"There!" he cried.

Nora looked at the purple house that seemed to tumble down a hill into the murky red water at the bottom. It was ridiculous and pathetic. She could say nothing.

He stood for a while brooding over it. Then he wrapped it carefully again.

"What you need is a change. Tomorrow we'll take all the money we can lay our hands on and be on our way. Eh, my darling? I want the smell of the sea again and a little shack on the sands."

His words beat against her desolation. All he could offer her of fresh adventure did not stir her.

"Nora, I need money to get started."

"We have no money."

"But he has!"

"Who?"

"Jonathon Thayer."

"Julian, you couldn't take money from him. You must see! Oh, can't I make you see? It would kill me if you ask him for money!"

"Why?"

"Because I never want to see him again. He pities us. Oh, how I hate him," she said half to herself.

"So that's it!"

She knew her cheeks began to burn scarlet. Her father had seen at once what she had not known until now. She loved Jon.

She sat very still as though the slightest gesture might betray her.

She loved Jon. That was perhaps why she had come home; why she had married Nicholas; so that she might be near Jon again. And she had not seen through her dark and tangled motives until this moment. She wanted him so dreadfully. And her father had sent him away by letting him know he needed money.

She knew with what uncanny power Julian would lay bare this sudden terrifying knowledge. She sat still, scarcely daring to breathe, to lift her eyes, waiting for the moment when he would pounce upon her secret.

Aunt Em came in to save her. Would Julian stay with them tonight, she asked. He told her that he would roll up in his steamer rug and sleep on the floor. But Nora said that he should have her room and she would sleep on the couch in the back parlor. She hurried up to her own room, thankful to be alone.

But when she reached the attic she sat down by the window, looking out at the stars through the horse chestnut branches. "I love him." The little words curled up about her heart. How did you make people love you? What did you do? What was the secret thing you said?

(Copyright, 1930, Jessie Douglas Fox)

Running away? Nora tries it tomorrow, but the truth she rebels against pursues her.
