Union Railroad Hauling Large Amount Freight

By W. V. Connor
(Observer Correspondent)

UNION (Special)—With shipments of lumber from the Oregon Trail sawmill, to Baker, logs from the ranch to Milton-Freewater, carloads of flour from the Union Flouring mills and shipments of lambs from the nearby ranches, the little railroad from Union to Union Junction is kept busy just at present.

Wash Hillman, who has been at Hot Lake griping all for several days, was recently brought home and is reported as a little improved.

Bulon Edvalson and Ruth Connor were in La Grande Sunday to attend the Normal school senior breakfast at the Sacajawea Inn and the baccalaureate services at the Normal school. They are both graduating from E. O. N. this year.

Sidney Vaden, who underwent an operation at Hot Lake for appendicitis last week, is rapidly recovering. William Wilkinson, of Telocast, is here this week helping out at the Union hotel during stock show days.

Miss LaVelle Huntington, of La Grande, and a student of the Eastern Oregon Normal school, was in Union Wednesday evening visiting Miss Ruth Connor.

Several pupils from the seventh and eighth grades of the Union school took the June state examinations Thursday and Friday. Monday Mrs. Nellie Vaden went to La Grande to help grade out the papers from the various Union county schools.

NO MEETINGS OF BOARD NEXT WEEK

SALEM, June 10 (AP)—No meetings of the board of control will be held next week, Governor Julius L. Meier and State Treasurer Rufus C. Holman stated today, as there are numerous events over the state which they wish to attend.

Hoss said he intended to remain on the job, but also indicated he would not criticize his colleagues for "baby play" or neglect of duty. Last week when Hoss was absent from a board meeting the governor charged him with neglecting state business.

Members of the state board inspected the state industrial school for girls, accompanied by William Elmer, state purchasing agent. Holman and Hoss visited the institution, and the party remained for lunch.

Governor Meier refused to accompany the other members of the board there, for the reason that he had refused to take lunch at any state institution. He announced he would visit the institution at a later date.

HOPEFUL HALLIE

NORA hated Fergus more as he stood there in his office judging her, without saying a word. It was a great sacrifice he had asked of her, to assume the burden of the little household from which her coming marriage with Fran was to take her. He seemed to be waiting her protesting declaration that her life was her own and that she must live it.

"I think we'll be able to manage," he said at last, "as you say it's your life and self-sacrifice is only self-indulgence," he ended sardonically.

But when she joined the others in the back yard her very restlessness seemed to permeate the air as though they all knew that something hung over them. Yet Aunt Em was sewing as usual and Hallie reading the paper.

When Fran had put the children to bed she came back to them. The others, Nora knew, had no inkling of what had happened. But Aunt Em's face looked drawn and odd to-night. Hallie had been rattling the paper in a nervous way and she began to read aloud in a dry husky voice:

"She came down the stairs that bright May morning, her hair all wet, her heart-shaped face and honey-colored hair."

"That's enough, Hallie," Aunt Em said.

"It's that awful newspaper tripe," Fran said listlessly.

The paper rattled in Hallie's hand; she stared about from one to the other. They looked up surprised.

"I wrote it," Hallie mumbled.

Fran sprang up and leaned over her shoulder.

"But that's not your name!" A. Standish, Darling, why didn't you let us know about it?"

"I didn't even know it was taken until I saw it in the evening paper," Hallie said, color burning in her sallow cheeks. "The story's perfect drive!"

"I thought there was something unusual about it the moment I heard it!" Aunt Em said.

They clustered about her crooked shoulders, excited, forgetting everything but this moment's triumph.

"It's awful rot," Hallie insisted, but her chin was trembling.

Nora read it through aloud while they hung on her words. True as it was, she had not been able to read through the love scene without faltering. But they were not even looking at her or noticing the tremble of her voice.

"It's charming!" Aunt Em glowed.

"How much do you think they'll pay you for it?" Fran asked breathlessly.

"Well, I don't know. Newspapers are so wealthy—probably $50. Although you often hear of writers getting a thousand."

"But don't you see what it means? It means Hallie can get anything she writes accepted. Oh Hallie, we shan't have to worry about money—oh Hallie, I can't believe it!" Fran was crying.

Aunt Em plunged into plans. Would they get new curtains for the back parlor or some rose bushes?

Hallie said modestly, "Well, I thought we might take a little place in the country. Not too far away so that it would be near a good school and the children would love a garden."

Fran's eyes were full of unshed tears.

"I told you we'd be rich in August!" Aunt Em said, "and you laughed at me, I remember. We must tell this to Fergus. Nora, you run in and get him. How pleased Julian will be! He was telling me about his pictures. He thinks they will all sell. He said he'd never touch a brush again—"

Nora put her arm about Fran and at the light touch Fran looked up. She caught her hand and laid it against her dry burning cheek.

"There is a way out!" Fran whispered.

SERVICES HELD FOR COUSIN OF MEXICAN CHIEF

ARDMORE, Okla., June 10 (AP)—In a little frame Catholic church here, funeral services were held today for Emilio Cortes Rubio, cousin of President Ortiz Rubio of Mexico and his student companion, Manuel Garcia Gomez, slain by a Carter county deputy sheriff here early Monday.

The requiem high mass was conducted in St. Mary's church, which seats 200. Scores of persons crowded the aisles and the throng overflowed into the street.

Salvador Cortes Rubio, another cousin of the president of the southern republic who escaped the gunfire, sat dry-eyed through the service.

Meanwhile County Attorney Marvin Shilling and special prosecutors for Governor W. H. Murray of Oklahoma and the Mexican government prepared for the preliminary hearing of

Portland To Tax Telephone Company

PORTLAND, June 10 (AP)—A proposal to place a tax of five per cent on the gross earnings of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph company here, as long as that company operates within Portland without a franchise, will be drafted in the form of an ordinance to be submitted to the council June 17.

Commissioner A. L. Barbur said today that inasmuch as the voters of the city approved a franchise calling for a 25 per cent reduction in rates, which the company refused, "it would be proper" to tax the company in order to arrive at some reduction in rates.

But when Nora went to look for Fergus he was gone.

She met her father coming up the steps, and cried pavidly:

"I've been having dinner with Jon. He's a fine young fellow, my girl. I tell you our fortune is made!"

It was true as Fran said, they had found the way out. Nora was exultant. Now Fran could go away. And Nora could leave them all knowing that they were happy at last.

In the morning when she woke a fretful rain beat against the windows. She and Fran lingered until the last moment so that they could wait for the postman. There was a letter for Hallie from the Evening Press. Hallie tore it open with trembling fingers. Inside was a check for five dollars.

They had to go away to a sanatorium in the mountains.

"Don't you envy me," Fran smiled, "escaping this August heat in the city?"

"You always were a lucky dog," Hallie admitted, but her thin hands were working together.

Aunt Em drew Fergus aside.

"You can tell me, I'm her mother. I'd rather know the truth." He told her simply that there was a good chance for Fran's recovery in the mountains. When he had finished she said:

"You must tell her not to worry about us. We'll manage somehow."

But she sat for a long time looking out of the window, her hands for once idle, as she recalled the Fran that had always called her.

Now that they needed money more than ever, three of Aunt Em's pupils had gone to the country for the summer vacation.

Hallie was working those days with a savage concentration; her eyelids a little swollen as she pounded away on the typewriter late into the hot summer night.

"Look at this," she said, as Nora stopped in the store room.

Hallie held out a letter.

"I love a man one year older but he has not been true to me. I want to ask you what I forgive him or not?"

She began to read the answer in a peculiarly sardonic voice:

"Dear Child: I too have known the bitterness of love rejected by a faithful heart. But I will hurt him. Think first whether you shall hurt him. What a woman's heart can do, how it can forgive and forget. And take back your friend into your affections, remembering that he too, dear, is human."

Hallie groaned as she ended, "Isn't that awful? I ask you, could any human being swallow that? But the woman who runs the column in the pulp paper magazine says that my stuff is so full of human interest!"

When she went upstairs Nora found Fran packing.

"How splendid they are!"

"You're just beginning to see," Fran said looking up, and ended, "I'm going tomorrow."

"Oh Fran!"

"I want to tell you, Nora—I've saved enough money to carry them until I get back. Don't look at me like that! I'm not going to die. I can't—don't you see—Fran choked, "for I have to come back to the children."

"But if I shouldn't get better, you'll stand by them, won't you? Mother's getting old and Hallie can't bear it alone."

The tears streamed down Nora's cheeks. How could she promise? Yet not to was to crucify Fran. Fran caught Nora's hand and laid it against her hot cheek.

Next morning Fergus took Fran to the station, carrying it off with such a casual air that they all played up to him.

"Have a good rest," Aunt Em said. "Don't think about us."

The taxi was waiting. Fran stooped to gather Dickie in her arms.

"You'll come tonight?" Alice cried.

"Not tonight, Alice, but pretty soon. You'll be a good girl?"

"Mad, are you ever coming back again?"

"Of course she is," Aunt Em said staunchly.

"Don't kiss me good-by, Nora," Fran said steadily. She looked back, smiling pitifully as they went down the steps. Fergus was waiting on the sidewalk.

Dickie began to cry, but Aunt Em tickled him until he was chucking again. The last Fran saw of her son was his waving hand and rosy, dimpled laughter.
