Medford Pear And Apple Crop Small

MEDFORD, Ore., June 12 (AP)—The Rogue River Traffic association yesterday estimated that the Medford district pear crop this year will be about 75 per cent of that harvested last season.

The estimate for the Bosc crop is the same as in 1930, with Comice, D'Anjous and Bartletts lower. The estimate is for 3,600 cars this year. Last season 4,200 cars were picked.

The estimate for the apple crop is 60 per cent of last year.

Shippers say the early estimate may be raised or lowered by weather conditions and the extent of the water supply. Pears now are in first class condition.

SNAPPY RED AUTOS BARRED IN LISBON

LISBON (AP)—Owners of red motor cars must change the color of their vehicles, says an ukase of the city government.

The cause is not the "Red" implication, but the fact that red is the color of all the urgent public services, such as fire, ambulance and mail.

Owners of red cars are given until the end of the year to choose a new color.

HELEN HICKS WINS ROSLYN GOLF TOURNEY

ROSLYN, N. Y., June 12 (AP)—One more golfing prize has fallen into the possession of Helen Hicks, Long Island girl, one of the longest drivers in women's ranks.

Miss Hicks captured the women's eastern title from Mrs. Dorothy Campbell Hurd, of Philadelphia, a former national champion, by five strokes in the 18-hole playoff of the tie in which they finished the regular 54-holes of the championship.

Miss Hicks gained a seven-stroke lead on the first nine holes which she covered in 39, two under women's par for the Engineers' Country Club course, but she lost all but two of these at the 11th and 12th holes where she used 13 strokes.

She pulled herself together, however, halved the 12th and clinched the match at the 14th where she increased her lead to five strokes when Mrs. Hurd, visiting one bunker after another, took six to get down. Miss Hicks protected that five stroke lead to the end.

SON OF CHAMP LOSES

CHICAGO, June 12 (AP)—Billy Papke Jr., son of the former middleweight champion o. the world, needs another start in Chicago to win the acclaim his dad gained here.

Billy Jr., son of the old "Kewanee Thunderbolt" who won the title from Stanley Ketchell and lost it back to him again in 1908, lost a close ten-round decision to Edgar Norman, Norwegian light heavyweight, last night at Mills stadium, in his first bout here. Billy Jr. fought a courageous fight but yielded to Norman's superior experience.

MAD PURSUIT

BY JESSIE DOUGLAS FOX

SYNOPSIS: When her cousin Frances has to go to a distant sanatorium, Nora Lake rejects Dr. Mare's appeal that she remain with her Aunt Emily to help care for the household and Frau's two children, abandoned by their father. She is happy in her engagement to Jonathon Thayer, brother of her late husband, the artist, Nicholas, and returns for the Thayer mansion, also the home of Jon's step-sister, Damon. Nora's father, Julian, arrives from Italy and borrows money from Jon to exhibit his paintings. Because she knows her father's worthlessness as an artist, she is dismayed upon visiting the art gallery to see, displayed as his, paintings far beyond his ability. Jon does not understand why she asks him to take her away.

Chapter 27

BY A DEAD HAND

THE train went on grinding over the tracks, filling Nora with a dull vibration.

If she could only think of something besides her father's pictures; think that she and Jon were going to be married, going to go far away, forgetting the past, beginning anew; climbing the Alps . . . she stopped, her lips between her teeth when she remembered that picture of the flowery meadows and ice-green glacier water.

Julian had never painted like that. But those were her father's pictures. That was his exhibition; those people crowding around him wanted to share the splendor of his recent achievement.

But who had painted those pictures? She sat up straight, clenching her hands together. Where had her father gotten those pictures that were signed so glibly with his name?

Terrible to think like this. Terrible if it were not true. But where had her father gotten those pictures? She sank back and closed her eyes. In a moment she was dozing. Again she was in the garden of the Villa Rosa and Nicholas was crouching down beside her, staring at his helpless hand. Why must she torture herself with dreams of Nicholas now? She started awake at last. Here was Jon again, and she must brace herself to meet him.

"How white you are, darling. Tired out with excitement. We'll drive right out home. I want Damon to know . . . and I want you, Nora. . . ."

"Nothing will ever keep you from me now?" she asked him.

"Nothing ever could!"

"Don't let's go home."

"Why?"

"Damon doesn't like me. I saw it that first time."

"Damon will love you when she knows you."

She closed her eyes again. Grinding, roaring over the tracks, tunneling through the darkness, then into the brilliant sunshine again. Would she go on like this forever, never reaching anywhere, but always living through this tortuous and terrible dream?

"What's the matter, Nora? Nothing's happened?"

"Oh, nothing, nothing. But I want to get there."

The train slid into the station at last. At last they were driving across the city. She was grateful for the low buildings, the small old-fashioned houses with their quaint old-world air, trees again and the long purple road that led to the Thayer house.

At last they were in the silvery gray room of Jon's home, the sunset coming in through tall windows.

How feverish her eyes looked, how desperately white she was. She flung off her hat with a wild gesture and saw then that someone else was in the room. Damon was sitting in the window, and she rose and came slowly toward Nora. Her tea gown with its delicate lace fell away at the throat, showing her milky skin. Her fair hair was bound around her head like a shining coil. She held out a cool hand to Nora as they sat down.

Nora began to talk breathlessly about nothing. Was Damon going to stay home now? Had she had a pleasant summer? Damon answered quietly, her eyes never once on Nora's face.

"Where have you been today?" Damon asked tonelessly.

"Oh, I was in New York—I met Jon—Jon's been so kind—"

Why did she talk in this senseless, crazy fashion? Why was she half mad with excitement?

She kept turning her eyes toward the window. There was something that she could not look at, something that changed the whole room.

"You see, I brought it down from my room," Damon said at last.

Nora was forced to look at Nicholas' painting of the old peasant woman. The brilliant light that suffused the scene; and the old woman with her patient folded hands.

"The man who painted those pictures is dead," Damon said.

All at once there was nothing more to say. Damon was looking at the picture, looking back at her. Here was Jon with the cocktail shaker. Nora grasped a thin stemmed glass and drank it thirstily. She felt as though everything in the room were spinning about her in a mad fantastic dance, and in the center Nicholas' picture blazed in a circle of light.

Damon and Jon were talking, and she sat there looking at them, as though they were strangers.

"You've heard about the show?" Jon asked. "Nora hasn't told you? Her father's a wild success."

Jon left them alone at last.

"I, too, saw the exhibition," Damon said.

The words dropped into the silent room as though they had fallen into a pool. Nora was battling through this silence, like a spent swimmer who fights for life.

"Tell me about your father's paintings," Damon was saying.

"I have nothing to tell you."

Why did her words spin off into this dreadful silence? Why was Damon looking at her in this strange searching way as though she were a small insect, secure on a pin, an insect struggling for escape?

"I should prefer that you would tell me when he painted all those pictures."

"How could I tell you?"

Her voice was hoarse. She wondered what had made it hoarse.

"I see that you know."

"Know—what?"

Damon's eyes caught the picture of the old peasant woman. In another moment Damon was going to say something that would change the face of the whole world for them both. She must stave it off.

"I don't know what you mean!"

"You know who painted those pictures."

The words were like hammer strokes, each one crashing against her skull. Her head sank lower and lower.

"The man who painted those pictures is dead," Damon said.

(Copyright, 1928, Jessie Douglas Fox)

Not at home. . . . That's what Nora's told tomorrow when she calls. Anyway, Damon's reason seems good enough.
