ADVERTISING DOLLAR WILL GAIN IN 1932

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP)—The board of directors of the Advertising Federation of America announced Monday that a national survey it has conducted indicates the 1932 advertising dollar will bring better results than at any time during the past two years.

Gilbert T. Hodges, president of the organization, said the survey shows a growing confidence in 1932 merchandising possibilities.

"Check-up of 102 large companies showed that those firms which increased their advertising in 1930 over 1929 made a 58 per cent better profit comparison than those which decreased it," the report states. "Those same firms increased their lead still further in 1931."

President Hodges pointed out that a recent analysis of seventy large cities found that appreciable business recovery has been under way for some months in the cities where newspaper advertising has been the heaviest.

Irrigation Relief Will Be Studied

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8 (AP)—Senator Thomas, Republican, Idaho, Monday called a session of the irrigation and reclamation committee for Thursday morning to study methods of financial relief for hard pressed irrigation districts in western states.

Thomas said he expected the possibility of an outright moratorium on the districts' debts to the government for reclamation work would be discussed.

The debts total millions, but officials of the reclamation bureau could not give an estimate of the amount. Under the bureau's policy, the cost of reclamation projects is repaid over a number of years.

Farm census figures show Florida has more than 37,000 horses and mules, none of which is in Monroe county.

"Soft" X-Rays Reveal Crystal Structure of Man's Skeleton

By Howard W. Hakesler (Associated Press Science Editor)
ST. LOUIS (AP)—The "soft" X-ray reveals that every man has two skeletons, the second and invisible crystal structure within his bones.

"Soft" X-rays lie between light and ordinary X-rays. By slanting them through bones at all angles Sterling B. Hendricks of the bureau of chemistry and soils of Washington, has completed a long sought picture of the crystal skeleton. He reported the studies to the Radiological society of North America.

The crystal skeleton is the non-living portion of bones, a lattice of substances mostly mineral which thread the zones. Dr. Hendricks studies show how the minerals are arranged and explain more clearly than heretofore just why substances like lead and arsenic get into the bones. Once there they serve as potential stores of poison.

The bone crystals normally are made up mostly of calcium carbonate, phosphorus, hydrogen and oxygen. These elements are combined into fairly large sized building "bricks" of crystalline form.

Lead and arsenic, Dr. Hendricks finds, have the right sizes and the right electrical forces to substitute easily for certain of the regular "bricks" forming the bone crystals. Substances which do not attack the bones so readily are kept out partly because they do not "fit" so well.

Lead readily displaces the calcium containing "bricks." Magnesium and soda also fit well in place of calcium, explaining why these two are sometimes detected in bones in extra quantity.

Only six hogs were found in Broadway county Fla., farm census reports show.

Quail are now being raised in Georgia for re-stocking the woods and fields.

There are 250,000 colonies of bees in Ohio.

Harry F. Powers Goes on Trial For Murder in W. Va.

By Robert St. John
CLARKSBURG, W. Va., Dec. 7 (AP)—Harry F. Powers went on trial for his life today.

Twelve hundred men, women and children packed Moore's opera house as the selection of a jury began. They had come to hear again the story most of them know by heart—how Powers wooed many women by mail, how two women and three children vanished after being seen with him; how they were traced to a strange building with subterranean chambers. Powers had built six miles out in the country; how their bodies were found in a ditch nearby, and how Powers was arrested and charged with killing all five in the windowless garage.

Hundreds waited outside the opera house court room for hours, only to find the demand for seats greater than the supply. They remained milling about outside, as the stage, complete with a border of paper mache trees and a street scene backdrop, became the setting for a realistic drama.

Troopers on Guard
More than a dozen troopers were stationed on the fringe of the crowd to prevent a demonstration, but there was none.

On the stroke of 9 a. m. Powers was led on the stage. He smiled and sat down in a chair beside the judge's bench and looked slowly, deliberately over faces that peered up at him.

Five of the panel were excused for having convictions Powers was guilty of the one murder for which he is on trial, that of Mrs. Dorothy Pressler Lenko, Northboro, Mass.

The portly, middle-aged specialty salesman who is accused of killing Mrs. Dorothy Lenko in the subterranean chambers of his specially constructed garage, was meticulous about his appearance.

His "court room outfit" was a newly pressed blue serge suit, black oxfords, white shirt, and black and white tie. He wore a pair of tortoise shell glasses which gave him the look of a student.

Twenty-five farmers, miners and small town business men are on the jury panel. Women are not eligible in West Virginia.

SUNSET PASS by Zane Grey

SYNOPSIS: Trueman Rock pretends to be a poor cowboy, but actually he has a stake of $10,000 which he has brought from Texas on his return to Wagontongue. He intends to try to get a job with Gage Preston, owner of a large outfit, who is suspected of cattle rustling. Rock has a firm reputation for honesty, but his quickness with a gun caused his speedy departure from Wagontongue six years before. The motive for connecting with Preston is that Rock has fallen in love at sight with Preston's daughter, Thiry. In addition to the rumors about Gage Preston, Rock is worried by the antagonistic attitude of Ash Preston, Thiry's brother, who has the reputation of being a killer. Rock's affair with Thiry also is threatened by the jealousy of Amy Ward, now Mrs. John Dobb, an old friend of Rock's. Sol Winter, another friend, warns Rock of danger.

count, because they about all do it." Rock regarded his anxious friend a thoughtful moment. "Winter, you've made a point you weren't calculatin' on. You're hopin' I'll find Preston one of the common run of ranchers. But you're afraid I won't."

It was nearly noon the following day when Rock had his pack outfit ready for travel. Leslie came up presently with the white horse. "Black leather an' silver trimmings," said the rancher, admiringly. "Never seen him so dressed up. An' the son-of-a-gun is smart enough to know he looks grand."

"He's smart," agreed Rock, with shining eyes. "Now we'll see if he'll hang on to the fence."

"Reckon you can ride 'most anythin'," observed Leslie, his appreciative glance running over Rock. The white horse took Rock's mount easily, pranced and clamped a little, and tossed his head.

"Good day and good luck, rancher," said Rock. "Same to you, cowboy," replied Leslie, heartily. "Reckon you don't need any advice about them hard nuts down in the Pass."

"Need it all right, but can't wait. When you see Sol tell him I'm off fine and dandy," rejoined Rock.

"What's the reason no cowboy ever rides long for Preston?"

"Sol, why is her face so sad?" queried Rock, stirred by his friend's implication.

"I don't know. I've asked her why she looks sad—which you can see when she's not speakin', but she always makes herself smile an' laugh then. Says she can't help her face an' she's sorry I don't like it. Rock, it hurts Thiry, sort of startles her, to mention that. It makes her think of somethin' unhappy."

"It's for me to find out," said Rock.

"You bet. I've always been puzzled an' troubled over Thiry. True, I may be wrong thinkin' you've grown to be a man. . . . But one last word. These Prestons have heard all about you, naturally, an' when you ride out on the range it'll all come fresh again. No cowboy ever had a finer reputation than you—for bein' an' honest an' clean, an' a wonder at your work. You never drank much, compared to most cowboys. . . . But your gun record was bad—forgive me, son, I don't want to offend. Remember I'm your friend. Every old-timer here knows you never went around lookin' for trouble. It's not that kind of a bad reputation. It's this kind. You've spilled blood on this range, often, an' more'n once fatal. That made you loved by a few, feared an' misunderstood by many, an' a mark for every fame-huntin' sheriff, gambler, an' cowpuncher in the country."

"Now you're back again, after some years, an' all you ever done here will come up. An' your Texas doin's, whatever they were, will follow you. . . . Now the point I want to make is this: Preston knows most of this or will know it soon, an' if he keeps you in his outfit it will be pretty strong proof that these queer dark hints from the range are without justification."

"Sol, it would seem so," replied Rock, meditatively.

"Wal, it'll be good if you find it that way. For Thiry's sake that, an' then for everybody concerned. Then these hints against Preston will be little different from those concernin' other ranchers. Most outfits have cowboys who brand calves an' kill beaves they oughtn't to. That's common, an' it don't

With that he headed down the road which the Prestons had taken the preceding day. Before Rock was far out of town he had ascertained his horse was a fast walker and had an easy trot. For speed and endurance, Leslie had committed himself to the claim that no horse in the country could approach him.

"I've hit the trail," sang out Rock, explosively, though it was a broad, well-trodden road that he was traveling.

As many times as he had ridden out from Wagontongue and other towns, and from the innumerable range camps all over the West, not one of them had ever been like this venture.

Out of town a little way Rock caught up with a young rider who had evidently seen him. "Howdy, cowboy!" he greeted Rock.

"Howdy, yourself!" returned Rock, genially. "I seen you was up on Leslie's white hoss, so I waited."

"You know the horse?" "Shore do. I ride for Spangler out here an' we often had Leslie's stock to pasture. . . . Reckon you own the white now. You kinda have that look."
