Sought Arrest to End Hunger

Homeless and hungry, Mrs. Yvonne De Voe, former dancer, smashed a glass show-window in New York so she would be arrested and given shelter. Here she is pictured in court, where the judge suspended her sentence and spectators took up a collection to buy her food. Her two children are being kept by a friend.

Knows His Oats

None of the old-fashioned feed bags for this horse! He has been equipped with a new type of bag, held up by metal bars, which enables him to get at the bottom of his meal without throwing his head in the air like the older generation of horses had to do. The device has been sponsored by the American Association for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

hardly died before there was confusion again.

HE WANTS ORDER
The late Speaker Longworth was a rather lenient presiding officer. He disliked pounding the gavel until it was absolutely necessary.

But not Garner. He intends to have order or else know the reason why apparently. From his attitude on opening day, no one would have been surprised had he told the sergeant-at-arms to proceed to the back of the chamber and forcibly yank some of the more noisy members either into the cloakroom or push them down into their seats.

Those 218 or so Democrats were out to do a little celebrating and nothing could stop them. It had been a long time since they had enjoyed the position they did that day. They just had to let off a little steam.

It was indeed a stirring scene—the nomination, election and induction of Garner into the speakership. It was a situation calculated to thrill the most jaded.

GARNER CHEERED
Rebel yells cut into deafening applause with the sharpness of a knife. And when the smiling, ruddy-faced Garner appeared on the floor between Bertrand Snell and Henry Rainey, who escorted him to the speaker's chair, there was unbridled enthusiasm.

It was the day for Democrats. And how they did make the most of it! And when Garner, his feet planted firmly on the speaker's dais—his ambition of a life time finally achieved—shouted to his colleagues: "I made no promises to get here. I make no promises now!" Truly, he was the beau ideal of a frenzied party.

STATESMEN OR POLITICIANS?

A delegation of men and women recently waited upon a congressman to argue against a certain bill. The solon listened to the argument and then announced that he would make up his own mind on the subject. The committee then asked him whether, if all the people of the United States were opposed to the bill, he would still make up his own mind. He replied that he would be guided by his own sense of what is right.

Obviously upset by the congressman's attitude, a member of the delegation demanded to know, "Is a representative a representative? Should he be guided by the expressed opinion of his constituents, or by his own judgment?"

This, indeed, is a nice question. Apparently the moral implications involved are not clearly defined; and whether a lawmaker should or should not be influenced by the kind of pressure which public opinion can bring to bear upon him, it would seem, should be determined by the wishes of the people who elect him to office.

That is, the people should have the right to tell their representative whether he is to follow their specific instructions or use his own judgment. But there is no machinery at present by which the people can make known their collective desire on that matter, and there is no legislation affecting the question.

But this much is certain; strong, able, self-respecting men make up their own minds and cannot be swayed by the outcries of any organized group, while weak and spineless men, demagogues and self-seekers always keep an ear to the ground and do the popular thing, regardless of their own convictions, if any.

Thoughtful people, on the whole, prefer representatives who have the ability and courage to determine the best course and support it boldly, for the pressure usually brought to bear upon congressmen is exerted by an organized minority and is frequently not representative of public opinion in general.

CONSIDER THE TOMATO

It can now be said of the tomato that "it has arrived." Respectable, affluent, important, it has risen high in the world. Not so many years ago it was suspected of poisonous possibilities and was commonly called the "love apple." Outliving this reputation, it was able to reach middle class rating through its extensive use for canned soup and ketchup.

But it was only after physicians and chemists discovered that the fruit contained valuable vitamins, and that it is soothing and stimulating to a disorganized digestive system, that the tomato entered society and became No. 1 in the food "400." Increased use of tomatoes in salads and in combination with various other foods has further promoted their popularity. This year's large crop found a ready market and record prices.

This Horatio Alger story of the vegetable kingdom points out a moral: Farm relief will come not from farm boards, farm loans, high-sounding theories and farm holidays, but from growing better products and finding more and better uses for them.

Another point emphasized by the story of the tomato is that a small change in the public appetite can make a world of difference with the market. Steady advertising has built up a gigantic industry from the apple tree. An American breakfast habit was responsible for starting large scale growing of citrus fruits in Florida, now that state's chief industry. If the American people ever lose their taste for ice cream the gigantic dairy business would topple, just as the potato business did when womankind, aspiring to straight lines, spurned the spud.

Fame and fortune await the man who can do for wheat, corn, cotton, and oil what has been done for the tomato.

With Congress and forty-eight legislatures working full blast, it takes a mighty smart lawyer to think up an unwritten law.

In Washington

WASHINGTON—Mr. Speaker "Jack" Garner apparently has decided that one thing he intends to have in the house of representatives is some semblance of order.
He did more banging with his gavel the first hour he sat in the speaker's chair the opening day than has been seen for a long time. True, he didn't meet with much success. There were too many happy demagogic souls on the right side of the aisle for that, but Mr. Speaker "Jack" pounded just the same.

He headed, begged and threatened for order. His new inauspicious wood gavel, presented by friends in Texas, was subjected to severe strain under his repeated blows.

Happy Democrats would quiet down for a moment, but only for a moment. The echo of the gavel had hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging or in anywise appertaining.

NOW THEREFORE, by virtue and authority of said writ, and in obedience to its commands, I will, on Saturday, the 9th day of January, 1932, at ten o'clock a. m. of said day, at the front door of the court house in La Grande, Union County, Oregon, sell at public auction all the right, title, interest and equity of the defendants, John Dean and Maud Dean in and to the above described real property, had on the 13th day of December, 1927, or thereafter acquired, to the highest bidder for cash, subject to redemption as provided by law, the proceeds to be applied in satisfaction of said judgment and decree, including costs and accruing costs of execution and sale.

Dated this 7th day of December, 1931.
JESSE BRESHEARS, Sheriff of Union County, Oregon.
