TIDE TURNING IN AFFAIRS OF RAILWAYS, SAYS RAILWAY AGE

Expressing the belief that "The general railway situation will be far better at the end of 1932 than it was at the end of 1931," the Railway Age, in an editorial in its Annual Review issue predicts that New Year's day will be long referred to as marking approximately the time when, in the greatest crisis in railway history, the tide turned and the earning capacity of the railroad industry ceased to decline and began to increase.

"At the beginning of 1932," says the Railway Age, "the tide had turned in the affairs of the railroads because there was going into effect an increase of $100,000,000 or more annually in their freight rates, and there was in immediate prospect a reduction, for one year, of 10 per cent in their basic wage scales, which, upon the basis of the payroll of 1931, would save them about $215,000,000. Assuming an increase in freight business, the total benefit derived by the railroads from these changes would exceed this aggregate of $315,000,000, and a slight improvement in freight business actually was occurring."

"Under normal condition," continues the Railway Age, "annual railway purchases from manufacturers amount to about $1,350,000,000 and from producers of fuel to about $350,000,000, a total of $1,700,000,000. In 1931 purchases from manufacturers amounted to about $639,000,000, and from producers of fuel to about $224,000,000, a total of about $863,000,000, a reduction of approximately $840,000,000, or of almost 50 per cent. No one other thing could do more to help general business than an increase in the earning capacity of the railroads and its use to prevent railroad bankruptcies and to increase employment and purchases."

The Railway Age concludes its prophecy for better things in 1932 with a statement from R. H. Aishton, chairman of the Association of Railway Executives, appearing in the same issue. Mr. Aishton writes:

"Any one who is pessimistic as to the railroads' future is lacking in confidence in the future of this United States. The railroads are not among these calamity howlers. It is unthinkable that an industry second to nothing in this country, except possibly agriculture, in the final analysis will ever be permitted by the people of this country to retrogress to that condition of inadequate transportation which existed only a few years ago. The railroads further believe that the shipping public, legislators, and regulating authorities will recognize this to a greater degree than ever in view of the situation confronting their means of transportation today."

DIVORCES DECLINE

Divorces decreased 5 per cent in 1930 and the public, which for 48 years had known only increases, is, besides being taken by surprise, seeking an explanation. Considering that the trend has been upward at the rate of 2 to 5 per cent per year, the decline is even sharper than the 5 per cent indicates.

Many reasons may be advanced for the above favorable showing; one of these being the fact that several states now have a law making it necessary for those contemplating matrimony to give several days notice of their intentions, thus serving as a check on hasty marriages.
