CULBERTSONS WIN BRIDGE MARATHON

opposite her husband at the card table, was a little behind in the play of the rubbers she had played. The first hand of the last rubber was passed out because Culbertson with good cards refused to bid, saying he could not then lose the match.

"Fly," said Mrs. Culbertson sharply. "I think that is ridiculous and unpardonable."

So stirred was she that she tried to make game herself on the second hand of the rubber at three no trump and was set one. Then Culbertson came to life for his favorite partner. In a contract for four hearts he made five, having 100 honors. On the next and last hand of the series he contributed for five diamonds and took 12 tricks. As a result, Mrs. Culbertson, who had entered the night's play with a plus of only 155 points for the 82 rubbers she had played, finished with a lead of 305 points for 88 rubbers.

Even Break in Rubbers
Lens and Commander Winfield, Liggett Jr., won three of the six final rubbers but failed to take full advantage of their possibilities. Liggett, who entered the match when Oswald Jacoby quit as Lenz's partner because of a dispute over psycho bids and misplays, finished 7800 points ahead for the 47 rubbers in which he took part.

Therein was solace to followers of the Lenz variety of the "official" system which was tested in the match with Culbertson's. The "official" group naturally will argue that had Liggett been in the match at first the Culbertsons would not have triumphed. With that Culbertson disagrees.

What Does It Prove?
After the match Lenz commented that the cards spoke for themselves, and that there was little difference in the systems. Culbertson said luck was a minor factor and that proper principles were the dominant factors. Liggett said the match proved nothing.

So far as relative value of cards is concerned statistics tabulated by Culbertson's staff were, by sides:
Honor tricks: Culbertson 3649½; Lenz 3648.
No trump count: Culbertson 18,091; Lenz 17,809.

The no trump count is that assigning a value of four to an ace, three to a king, two a queen and one to a jack.

Mrs. Culbertson's bids and playing were the great factors in the final session.

RAILROADS FILE PETITION
WASHINGTON, Jan. 8 (AP)—The Great Northern railway and the Western Pacific today asked the interstate commerce commission to compel the Southern Pacific company to exchange passenger traffic from the east with them at San Francisco.

The complaint alleges the Southern Pacific has refused to concur in a plan to issue joint through tickets between the east and Los Angeles via San Francisco with the complaining roads, although it does so with other lines.

It is claimed the Southern Pacific insists that this passenger traffic be exchanged at Portland.

HILGARD PERSONALS
By Wilmerth Welmer (Observer Correspondent)
HILGARD (Special)—School began again Monday after a two week vacation with all the students present, ready to begin their work for the final examinations for this semester.
The county school superintendent, E. A. Sayre, was a visitor at the Hilgard school Wednesday.
A New Year's pinocchio party was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Welmer last Thursday evening, with four tables at play. High scores were made by Millard Stearns and Mrs. Claude Bartness, low scores by Mrs. A. Reynolds, of La Grande, and Donald Isal. A dainty luncheon was served by the hostess at a late hour.
Mrs. Belva Williamson, of Pendleton, is working as second truck operator at the O-W depot here. This position has been off since September but has been again added, due to the weather.
Bruce Morehead, Mr. Phillips, of the Mt. Emily logging camp, and Alvah Thornburg, of Starkey, were business visitors here and in La Grande on Monday.
Mrs. G. O. Thornbrue and daughter, Eva, were business visitors in La Grande on Wednesday.
Miss Blanche Whiting, teacher of the Hilgard school, returned from her vacation Sunday afternoon, the holidays having been spent at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Whiting, at Mt. Glen.

SUNSET PASS by Zane Grey

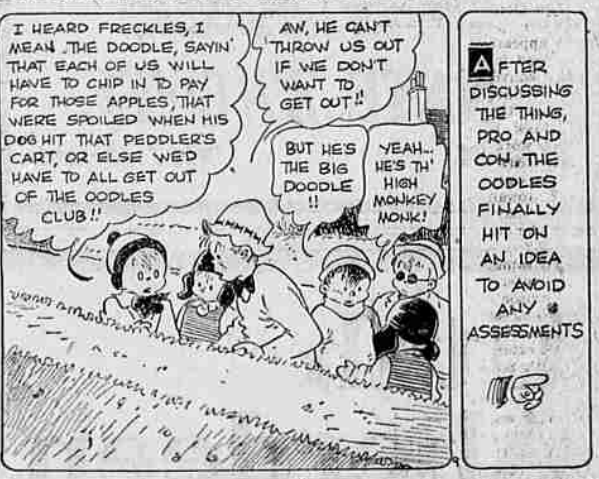

SYNOPSIS: Local suspicion is rising against Trueman Rock because he is working for Gage Preston, who is believed to be a cattle rustler. Rock took the job to be near Preston's daughter, Thiry, with whom he is in love. Ash, Thiry's brother, is jealous and shows marked hostility to Rock.

Chapter 33 MASQUERADE
The red-shirted rider had evidently had a drink or two, but he appeared level-headed, and slowly the devilish geniality with which he had accosted Amy Dabb faded into cold, watchful speculation. His tawny gaze swept Rock from head to foot, and back again. "Howdy, Mister Big Hat!" he replied.
"My name is Rock."
"About had that reckoned?" returned the rider, guardedly.
"You're Heblitt's foreman, Peeples," went up Rock, curtly. "He told me you were lookin' for me. Reckon you didn't look very hard."
"Wall, I can't say there was any particular call to rustle."
"Thus these two range-riders measured each other. The foreman of Heblitt's outfit appeared to be long to that type of cowboy whom Rock was wont to believe the salt of the earth.

The two range-riders measured each other.
"You're not drunk," replied Rock. "How's it you insult a married woman on the street?"
"Is that any of your business?"
"It shore is. I'm an old friend of Amy Dabb's. Rode for her husband. Reckon it's not exaggeratin' to claim I'm his friend, too."
"All right, Rock, I apologize," returned the foreman, readily, though resentfully. "But honest to God, if shore ain't because I think I ought to."
"She plump surprised me—made me sore."
"No wonder, I you thought had of her," rejoined Rock, feeling his way. This man could be talked to. "Reckon you don't know Amy well. She's a lonesome and unhappy girl. She met you, liked you, 'cause you're a good-lookin' and interestin' cowboy. And afterward she got to thinkin', remembered she was married and made up her mind next time to cut you. Now, tell me square, don't you think it was kind of low-down to brace her, right on the street?"
"Rock, I reckon it was, if she's what you seem to think," responded Peeples, staring hard. "Shore you know more about me than I do about you. It ain't a very square deal all around."
"I would take your word, if you shook on it," replied Rock.
"Wal, I guess I'd take yours."
"All right, Peeples. We're gettin' somewhere," said Rock, more heartily. It always warmed him to be taken seriously when he was in earnest. "I'll give you my word, confidentially, I'm not aweet on Amy Dabb. Only want to help her, before it's too late. . . . And more, I am darn good and awful sweet on some other girl."
"Much obliged for your confidence," responded Peeples. "I'll ask Amy's pardon."
"We can shake on that, anyway."
"Now, Peeples, tell me why you were lookin' for me?"
"Easter's your other cracks," replied Peeples, lazily. "I kept hearin' about you out on the range. Then lately you come back an' went to ride for Preston. That made me curious, an' I reckon I jest wanted to meet up with you an' see for myself. Rock, do you know one of them queer range shadows is creepin' over the Prestons?"
"I've heard so," replied Rock.
