Salvage From Films
At the end of the normal life of a motion picture, three years, the film is burned and the raw silver extracted from the ash. This is quite considerable, 200,000 pounds of film yielding about 250 pounds of the metal.

CONFESSING STORIES
By Alice Judson Peale

A great many of the books which are published for children contain an indiscriminate mixture of the real and the fantastic of a sort which has no validity in either sphere.

They usually are the works of authors who unconsciously talk down to children and who think they must prettify and sugar-coat everything that is for a child's consumption.

Children who have been fed on really well written fairy tales, animal stories and realistic tales, are usually bored by them. They reject them as "silly."

But the young child to whom the difference between fact and fancy is not yet altogether clear often is confused by them although he appears to enjoy them.

Sometimes, even, really good stories are confusing if the child is too immature to understand them. He draws wrong inferences which make more difficult the task of sorting out truth and falsehood in his own life.

To the child it should always be made plain where reality leaves off and make-believe begins.

The child's comments, his facial expressions, the whole set of his body while he listens to a story should tell a parent whether his selection has been wise.

When the child's face reflects anxiety when there should be a smile, the story obviously is not right for him.

If his later conversation shows that he has taken literally something that should have been accepted as make-believe, either there was something the matter with the story or the story was meant for an older child.

Those Good Old Days
A party of unemployed was employed by the British government to excavate the ruins of the Pevensey castle, a very long and interesting piece of work. While on the work they came upon a stone slab and on raising it nearly toppled into an old dungeon. There were chains and bolts in the floor, and there were no windows. Prisoners were lowered 15 feet into this dismal hole, and there left in darkness.

American Sapphire Fields
There are two notable sapphire fields in the United States. One, among the great corundum deposits of Macon county, North Carolina, has yielded some very good gems. The other is in the gold-bearing, sandy region near Helena, Mont.—Oas Logie.

Health

ADVICE TO THE DEAF

The deafened individual is usually sorely in need of good counsel. If he had at one time possessed good hearing, his loss constitutes a psychological and economic as well as a strictly medical problem.

It has been said that a person entering the land of silence often finds himself even more isolated than does the victim of blindness.

To overcome the isolation the deafened individual must make use of the artifices which science has made available. Foremost among these is lip reading.

The individual whose hearing is but slightly impaired may more than compensate for this condition by paying closer visual attention to the speaker.

Much of our so termed hearing is in reality "seeing." We understand what is being said by watching the lips and the facial expressions of the speaker.

Those whose hearing is more seriously impaired may need instruction in lip reading.

Such instruction is available in different parts of the country, and inquires relative to this and other aspects of help for the deafened may be addressed to the League for the Hard of Hearing, 480 Lexington avenue, New York City.

This is a voluntary association rendering non-commercial service to the deafened.

Mechanical hearing aids, electrical or otherwise, to be of any value, must be suited to the patient and his condition.

Before investing in any hearing device one should secure, either from one's private physician, hospital, clinic, or from the league, advice as to the dependability of the instrument.

Democrats Lose Battle Against Tammany Inquiry

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 20 (AP)—After a turbulent session, the Republican New York state senate Tuesday had steam-rolled all Democratic opposition and approved further legislative inquiry into the affairs of tammany controlled New York City.

The Democratic minority, under tammany leadership, fought every inch of a losing battle to prevent a continuation for another year of the Hofstadter investigating committee, only to be overruled by a vote of 28 to 23.

The Republican victory was won, however, only after Samuel Seabury, its times, assuming that it is a dependable instrument, can be determined only by the physician who knows the nature and the cause of the deafness.

Hot words uttered
Hot words passed as the Democrats denounced the efforts to discredit the New York City administration.

"The issue," shouted Senator John J. Dunnington, minority leader, "is get the mayor. Seabury has ruined the credit of New York."

When the senate adjourned in the early hours of the morning the next step was up to the Republican assembly, in whose hands it was expected to fare well.

Rock was admitted to a cheerful library, and the presence of Dabb and Lincoln.

"Howdy, Rock! Get down an' come in," was Dabb's greeting. "Glad you came early. . . . Tom, you remember True Rock, don't you?"

"I shore do," replied Lincoln, extending a lean hand.

"Sit down, friends," said Dabb. "I've got two more fellows comin' after dinner, an' we'll have a little game of draw after. . . . Now, Rock, I've talked your trouble over with Tom, an' here's his angle. I'm bound to say I think it a solution to a nasty problem. At that it hinges most on you. . . . Go back to Preston an' tell him the truth. That he's found out by some cattle-men, an' he must quit his butcherin' stolen cattle before Hebbitt gets on him. Tell him he's to come before the Cattle Association. That means Tom an' me, an' Hebbitt, sure, but we can handle him. We'll keep the deal out of court, an' Preston out of jail, provided his comes to us, pays Slagle off, an' squares Hebbitt for the stock he has lost. Then Preston, an' his four sons, especially this Ash Preston, who's the ringleader, no doubt, must leave the country."

"Wonderful fair and fine of you gentlemen," returned Rock, instantly, his set face breaking.

"Wal, Rock, it's about this heah way," put in Lincoln, with his slow Southern accent. "We shore can afford to be generous because Preston hasn't stole from us. Then we don't want the range slandered by such a raw cuss."

"All right, Rock. What do you say?" queried Dabb, as if in a hurry to get it over. "Will you settle it?"

"Yes, with one reservation," replied Rock, grimly.

"An' what's that?"

"I can manage Preston. But when Ash finds out, he'll fight. He can't be persuaded or frightened."

"Shore. An' your reservation is you'll have to kill him," interposed the imperturbable Texan.

Rock did not make any reply.

Before sundown of another day Rock reined his sweating horse in front of Slagle's cabin, and dismounted to approach that individual who had come to the door.

"Slagle, I want to talk Dutch to you," said Rock, without any greeting.

Washington, Jan. 20 (AP)—Governor-General Theodore Roosevelt is anxious to reach the Philippines at an early date. He said Tuesday he will leave Seattle for Manila, Jan. 29, if possible. Meanwhile, he is trying to assimilate information to prepare himself for his new duties.

The new governor said he is not prepared to discuss what his policies will be.

MANILA, Jan. 20 (AP)—Confidence that Theodore Roosevelt, new governor of the Philippines, would receive the co-operation of the islanders was expressed here by Manuel Quezon, president of the Insular senate.

Quezon said he was impressed by the interest Roosevelt had shown in the promotion of home industries in Porto Rico while he was governor there, and by his efforts to improve the lot of the working people and small land-owning class.

Quezon had declined to comment until confirmation of the appointment was announced.

"Dabb told me you'd come to him with proof of Preston's guilt."

"The devil he did!" ejaculated Slagle.

"Yes, and my business with you is to buy your silence."

Slagle showed further amazement and interest. He listened intently to Rock's story.

"Rock, this hyar don't set right on me. What's your idee? You shore can't care that much about Preston."

"Jess, you're wastin' my time," replied Rock, impatiently. "I've told you, an' I'm goin' to save her dad because of that."

"I savvy. Shore call it decent of you. Makes me want to get square with you. An' the fact is, Rock, I couldn't prove anything on Preston now. The Half Moon hides have been moved from where I found them."

"Well, no matter. You did find them, an' your word would convince ranchers, if not a court. My offer stands. What'll you take?"

"Rock, have you got backin'?"

"No. I've my own money, Cash!"

"How much you got?"

"Five thousand."

"Whard' you ever get that much? Wal, I hate to take you up, Rock, an' I wouldn't if I didn't feel shore you'll get it back, or some, anyhow. Say I take half of what you

Chapter 43 BUYING SILENCE

FRESH HALF MOON hides hidden close to where Preston last butchered. He can show these any time, I called Tom Lincoln to talk it over. We advised Slagle to keep mum an' wait.

"Dabb, here's what I'll do, and I'm sure thankin' you for the hunch," returned Rock, passionately. "I'll buy Slagle's silence. I've five thousand dollars in the bank. I'll stop Gage Preston's stealin' before it's too late. . . . And if I have to, I'll call Ash Preston out!"

"No! No!" exclaimed Dabb, violently. "Not that, anyway. . . . Rock, will you never settle down to peaceful ranchin'? Suppose you come to my house for dinner to-night. I'll have Tom Lincoln. We'll talk it over."

It was an interminably long day for Rock. It was dusk when he walked out to the mansion that was John Dabb's home.

Rock was admitted to a cheerful library, and the presence of Dabb and Lincoln.
