Oregon Freshmen Down Salem, 31-19

EUGENE, Ore., Jan. 23 (AP)—University of Oregon's freshmen quintet defeated Salem High 31 to 19 here last night with a second half spurt that was not to be denied. The Capital City youngsters drew within six points of the youngsters in the closing minutes, but the stirring attack of the latter settled the issue. The freshmen led 14 to 7 at the half.

Sylvan Camp and Bill Berk starred for the Webfoots, while Glen Sanford, all-state high school guard, was outstanding for the visitors.

Schmeling and Sharkey Sign Articles For 15-Round Match in Gotham

By Herbert W. Barker
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

NEW YORK, Jan. 23 (AP)—Managerial shadow-boxing over, Max Schmeling and Jack Sharkey have signed articles for a 15-round heavy-weight championship bout to be held somewhere in "Greater New York" sometime in June.

Days of high-powered conferences among managers, promoters, fighters and lawyers culminated last night in the official signing, only a few hours before Schmeling embarked on the Europa for a short visit at his home in Germany.

The exact date for the bout is to be set within sixty days along with the site which is expected to be the Yankee Stadium. The date probably will be June 18. The official announcement said Schmeling would receive 37 1/2 per cent and Sharkey 12 1/2 per cent of the gate receipts, the champion's and challenger's share under the rules of the New York state athletic commission.

Although Schmeling signed for only this one bout, Madison Square Garden obtained an option on Sharkey's services for one title defense in the event he should win the title from the German. This second fight would be probably in September.

Schmeling plans to return to this country late in March.

LOWER COVE PERSONALS

By Mrs. Nell Night
(Observer Correspondent)

LOWER COVE (Special)—Show is disappearing here and the creeks are beginning to run. Stock is doing fine. Most of the farmers are busy now with the winter work.

A Christian Endeavor society has been organized at the Lower Cove school and the first meeting of the new organization was held Jan. 21 with Mrs. Vera Case as their leader.

The attendance at the Lower Cove Sunday school was 32. There are several cases of measles in that vicinity which lowered the attendance.

Rev. Howard Smith, of La Grande, conducted services at the school Sunday evening.

Reports for the past six weeks at Frosty school find Edna Wiseman and Raymond and Della Morris on the honor roll and Edna and Alice Wiseman, Manfred, Lowell Raymond and Della Morris and Wren Case with a perfect attendance record. The eighth grade pupils are Wren Case, Jean Koger and Judson Morris. They are steadily working in reading, circle books to earn exemptions in the state exams.

T. B. Johnson attended the wool growers convention in Pendleton this week.

Mrs. T. B. Johnson is quite ill this week.

Nell Night and family were business visitors in La Grande on Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Johnson and Miss Anna Hacker attended a dance in Union Saturday night.

IMBLER LOSES TO N. POWDER TEAM, 19 TO 17

After overcoming a 13-3 lead at the end of the first half, Imbler lost to North Powder with a final score of 19 to 17 last night in the Imbler gymnasium, after a hard game in which the score was knotted at various times during the second half. The Imbler girls defeated the North Powder girls' team 23-5 in a preliminary.

Wagoner, forward for Imbler, was high with a total of 10 points. Williams, Powder forward, gained five points to lead his team.

The lineups and individual scoring follow: Imbler: Conklin (2), Mary Gray (1), forward; Woodell, center; Jackson (3) and McKinis (2); North Powder: Gorham, guard; Sloan (2), Williams (5), Walk, center (4); Simons (4), Hobbs (2), Henderson (4) and Talley (2).

WOOL MARKET

BOSTON, Jan. 23 (AP)—A large volume of wool has been taken out of the market during the past week.

Western grown combing wools of the finer qualities feature the trade as manufacturers covered orders for light weight spring goods.

Prices tended stronger on combing, 58-59's territory wools on 64's and finer quality western wools. Average and short French combing staple sold more readily and prices were steady to firmer.

UNION (Special)—At the Friday morning grade assembly at the South school Tony D. Smith, local postmaster, talked to the boys and girls about the history of this department of the national government. A short program was put on by the fifth grade children preceding Mr. Smith's talk.

The fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh grade pupils attended the assembly meeting. These weekly affairs were started the first of this month and are proving very popular with the children of the school.

Local sportsmen are looking forward to Feb. 18 when they have been assured that the members of the state game commission and other state officials connected with the department will visit the Union club. Plans are under way to remodel the sportsmen's cabin at the local hatchery grounds so all those who may desire to attend the coming meeting can be accommodated.

Lillis Horn and family, who have been visiting at Sweet Home, Oregon, returned to their home in Union the first part of the week.

A string of grade basketball players, coached by Supt. Roy Conklin, went to North Powder Thursday afternoon to play the grade boys of the latter school. The game was won by the Powder team.

Girls of the seventh grade staged a leap year party Wednesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Miller in South Union. Boys of the same class were their invited guests for the occasion.

Safeway store Tuesday night resulted in a failure, according to a check up on the stock by the local manager, Ralph Smith the following morning.

The robbers had gained entrance to the store by breaking the glass in the front door, but evidently were forced to leave before they could secure anything of value.

The Ladies Aid organization of the local Methodist church held its January meeting at the home of Mrs. Louisa Burwell in South Union Wednesday afternoon, with 28 present.

Besides their routine business the women planned to help entertain the visiting Epworth League when they are here next week for the mid-winter convention. The Aid members will serve dinner at the church Saturday evening.

Mrs. Collins joined the society at this meeting. Visitors at the Wednesday meeting were: Mrs. Clarence Craver, Mrs. Jennie Conklin, Mrs. Thora Wortman, Mrs. Helen Buick, Miss Gamble, Mrs. Frank Wigglesworth.

A social event of much interest to the local school teachers was the surprise and social which they gave the pastor of Sweet Home, Mr. Roy Conklin Thursday evening. The teachers, their husbands or wives, Ed Miller and C. L. Cadwell of the school board, Mrs. Miller and Miss Alice Cadwell gathered at the High school, then went in a body to the Conklin home to inform the honor guests of the intended social. Mr. Conklin was soon assisted to help entertain the visiting Epworth League when they are here next week for the mid-winter convention. The Aid members will serve dinner at the church Saturday evening.

The young people's meeting led by Velva Hammack was centered around the foundation of all government, "Home." The discussion whether young people were giving enough to the home according to what they received in return brought forth different views and ideas. Another point emphasized was "that we should be more thankful for services rendered us by our parents."

As the business meeting it was decided to visit the Enterprise Presbyterian society next Sunday evening, Jan. 24, returning their visit of a short time ago. A committee to see about getting ways of transportation for those wishing to attend was appointed. It consisted of Maynard Hanland, and Calvin Plants, with Warner Crow assisting them. Those who wish to go should be at Bradley's Drug Store at 6 p. m.

SUNSET PASS

by Zane Grey

SYNOPSIS: The Prestons are desperate straits since their cattle have been stolen. Rock, but Trueman Gage tries to persuade Gage to try to make peace with the rancher. Rock shoots that Preston's son, Ash, dominates his father, but his interest is Thiry, Gage's daughter, spurs him on.

They would sacrifice you, Ash would agree to this, meanin' to shoot me in the back. . . . No, Thiry. . . .

"You—will not?" she sobbed.

"Never! Not even to have you!" Suddenly, then, he had a wild weeping creature in his arms, whose cries were fitful, whose beating hands and shaking body wrought havoc to the iron of his mood. "Oh, thank God—you won't!" she wept, lifting streaming eyes and working face. "I prayed you'd refuse. I told Dad you'd never, never do it. . . . I told Ash he lied. . . . he'd never let you have me. . . . But they made me—they drove me—I gave in. . . . Trueman darling, say you forgive. I was weak. I loved him so—and I'm almost broken. . . . But you lift me from the depths. I love you more—a thousand times. Let come what will. I can face it now.

"Don't go back to the Pass, Thiry pleaded.

"I must. I'll go alone."

"But I'm afraid. If you meet him—Oh—you will! . . . Trueman, I couldn't hate you. Once I thought I might. . . . Oh, don't go!" She would her arms around his neck and cling to him with all her might.

Rock rode down upon the men.

had taken openly before her brothers. Rock could not shake off his trance. Still, it did not seem the Thiry he knew.

"Kiss me," this unknown Thiry said, not shyly, nor yet boldly, but somehow unnaturally for her. When Rock obeyed, restraining himself, in his bewilderment, she put her arms around him and her face against his neck.

"Bad news, Trueman dear," she said, as if forced.

"Sure I could have guessed it. But it's welcome, since it fetched you."

"Ash made a killing of Half Moon steers and shipped the beef from Wagontongue," went on Thiry, talking by rote.

Rock's frame jerked with the hot gust of blood through his veins, but he did not voice his anger and dismay.

"Did you want you to come in with us—share our fortunes, our troubles—our sins. . . . help us fight these enemy outfits. . . . If we—"

"We?" he interrupted, in bitter heat.

"Yes, we, Ash and Dad and I—and my three brothers. . . . and you."

"And what do I get for spillin' blood for thieves? Ah, that is Preston's game. He wants me to kill—to spread terror among those Wyoming outfits. . . . And my reward will be—"

"Me," she said, without emotion.

"With Ash Preston's consent?" demanded Rock, angered to probe to the depths of this proposition.

"Dad claims when you become one of us—Ash will have to consent."

"Thiry Preston!—You ask me to do this thing?"

"Yes," she droned. But he could feel a clanging in the stiff form against him.

"You ask me to be a thief—a killer—to save your rotten brother, your weak and crooked father?" he flung at her, in a stern and terrible voice.

"I—ask—you."

In violence, almost with brutal force, Rock shook her, as if to awaken her out of a torpor.

"No! No, you poor driven girl!" he cried. "I would die for you, but I'll never let you ruin your soul by such dishonor. They have blinded you—preyed on your love. Your brother is mad. Your father de-

Friday night was a delightful success. It was sponsored by the freshman class and was a leap year event.

The economics course which has been taken up this last semester requires plenty of hard study and proves to be an efficient means of keeping students out of mischief.

Beginning with next week the commercial geography class will start working on term papers. Instead of the usual oral reports given on every Friday this time will be given to work on the term papers. Several interesting topics to choose from have been offered.

The first dividends from the student body book store will be distributed this week.

Quite a little interest is being shown by the fifth and sixth grades in their spelling work. Every Friday afternoon they have a general review in the form of a spelling game. Quite a marked improvement is being made by both classes.

Rock rode down upon the men.

"Take me away—far away across the mountains," she begged, her lips parting from his to implore mercy, and then seeking them again. "It's the only way. I am yours, body and soul. I ask nothing more of the life but that you spare him—and take me. . . . The boys will let us have a pack. We can cross the mountains. It is not yet winter. . . . Then somewhere we two will live for each other. I will forget him and all this horror. And you—will never—kill another man."

"Thiry girl, hush; you are breakin' me," he cried. "I shall go alone—make one last stand to save your father."

Rock rode the zigzag trail down to the Pass in four hours.

There did not appear to be any untoward condition at the ranch that obviously affected the women-folk. Preston had ridden off early that morning to a general roundup out on the range, at a place called Clay Hill.

"Rock! I'll fids over to Clay Hill," muttered Rock.

Soon afterward he was riding down the Pass to take the trail up on the range.

Clay Hill was a famous old round-up ground.

Rock's keen eye snapped at the old-time scene. Dust and color and action! Herds of cattle, fields of horses! Not until he rounded the southern corner of Clay Hill, where the trail ran, and came abruptly upon the first cabin, horses, wagons, men, did he grasp that something was amiss. What could check a general roundup in the middle of the afternoon? No cowboys on guard! No cutting or branding! No movement, except a gradual straggling of the herds! The men he saw were in groups, and their postures were not expressive of the lazy, lounging, careless leisure attendant upon meat hours or cessation of work.

Rock had permitted himself no anticipations. But now he divined the hour he had long dreaded; and instead of halting, as if momentarily checked by an invisible blow in the sinister air, he spurred his horse and rode down upon the men, scattering dust and gravel all over them.
