HOW NATION'S "AVERAGE MAN" IS MEETING THE DEPRESSION

By Robert Talley (NEA Service Writer) (Copyright, 1932, NEA Service, Inc.) FORT MADISON, Iowa, Mar. 21—The average man is still making money in these days of depression, but not as much as he used to.

He doesn't think Hoover can be re-elected this year, because he sees the people in the mood for a change at Washington. He thinks the Democratic nominee—who will likely be our next president—will be some "dark horse" who has not yet been mentioned, preferably a man of the Theodore Roosevelt type.

L. Gray, proprietor of a Fort Madison clothing and furnishing store, who four years ago became nationally famous when he was chosen by a leading magazine as the United States' most typical "average man"...

"What do you think of the Japanese aggression in Shanghai?" "I think the Japanese are going too far. They are trying to sell their goods to China with a bayonet. They are overdoing it. They will lose by it in the end."

"What about the proposal to cancel the war debts?" "In my personal view, these debts should be paid, but there are other things that may enter into it. For instance, there is the question as to whether they can be collected. It is beyond my knowledge of conditions for me to attempt to answer just how things would work out if an attempt was made to force collection."

"To what extent does an average man read the newspapers?" "I first read the headlines to find things I am interested in. Then when I find a story I am interested in, I read it all the way through," he replied. "On the average, though, I would say that of 20 stories I read only three or four, getting my information on the rest from the headlines."

Mr. Gray, the "average man," seems average in all respects. He lives in what is about the average town, his clothing store is about the average clothing store to be found in a town of this size, his mode of living is about the average, his family is of the average size. It consists of his wife and two children: Dick, 13, and Sue, 8.

I asked him what he planned to make of his son, Dick, now in the eighth grade at an average school. "I'm not going to try to make anything of him, but let him do that for himself. He is greatly enthused over aviation and wants to be a pilot."

"Would you have any objection to your son becoming an airplane pilot?" "Not if he is properly trained for the job. I think aviation offers a big future to boys. He's been up in a plane several times already and is wild about it. As for myself, I have never been aloft."

"What about your little girl?" "Oh, she's just an average eight-year-old girl. Takes a lot of interest in curls. That's about all I can say."

Reverting to business, Mr. Gray said he has reduced his prices, just the same as other clothing merchants. On the average, the reduction in his suits during the past two years has been from about $33 to about $28. Other merchandise in his store has been reduced proportionately.

Mr. Gray is not buying a new car this year. He is now driving a two-year-old Buick. He says he figures that will do him for another year. He owns his home, so he doesn't have to worry about asking the landlord to reduce his rent.
