

The Garden

Chats With Parents

VEGETABLES STORE UP SUNSHINE There are two main factors fundamental in the success of a garden. These are good soil and plenty of sun.

String beans will grow if shaded for half the day but will not produce so large a crop as in the sun. Parsley may be grown in the shade, but that about exhausts the possibilities.

The garden should be located with a south exposure if it can be so arranged, an eastern exposure is next best. Shrubby and trees at the north of a garden are excellent protection from cold winds in early spring or fall.

There need be little worry as a rule over the very early vegetables, which go into the ground before the trees are well leaved out and are so near maturity before the foliage becomes dense and fully developed.

Seedbeds from which the plants are to be transplanted may well be in a partly shaded place. This is to prevent too quick drying out of the soil and wilting of tiny seedlings under the direct rays of the hot sun.

The plants are moved from the seedbed into sunny quarters. Given sufficient sun, the main problem of the gardener is to get the soil into the best possible condition to plant the seeds. After several seasons of cultivation the soil should be well under control, leaving the principal problem that of fertilization.

A sunny garden sloping to the south will give the earliest vegetables. A southeastern slope is next in early production. This is not of great importance except for market gardeners growing on a large scale. Any location where there is sun all day is a good place for the home garden.

all the time. At six months of age, 15 hours of sleep daily is a fair average. From one to four years of age 10 hours of sleep is required. Subsequently 9 hours is the rule.

Any marked deviation from this schedule calls for study of the case, particularly if sleep is broken, the child waking after a few hours of sleep, and remaining awake. In such cases one should first consider the possibility of the child's being awakened by pain and disturbances in its body functions.

KITTY FREW by JANE ABBOTT

SYNOPSIS: Kitty Frew, a nice little girl, goes to a party and meets a boy named David. She is attracted to him and they become friends. David is a bit of a rascal but Kitty is sure of her own mind.

Chapter 14 RUNAWAY

"So you're run away, bag and baggage," David said. "I had to, David. How could I stay? Don't you see that I couldn't?"

Kitty's face, white and strained, lifted pleadingly to David Frew's. He turned from it a little abruptly. "Yes, I can see that you thought that. I went, myself—just like that. But I've always been sorry I did, for it gave her an 'inning'."

"What's your plan, Kitty? Do you want to go home?" "I thought of that at first but I'd rather not. I'd hate to go like this—to have them know—for Gar's sake, you see—"

"What's your plan, Kitty? Do you want to go home?" "I thought of that at first but I'd rather not. I'd hate to go like this—to have them know—for Gar's sake, you see—"

"That's a good girl!" She might have been, indeed, the child he thought her. "You'll like Dorcas. She lives just two blocks down the street. We'll go there now. Maybe we'll be lucky enough to find her without any engagement this evening."

Outside David drew Kitty's hand through his arm. In spite of herself her step dragged; it still seemed unthinkable that she could bare to anyone but David the situation that had brought her here.

But he only laughed. "Wait 'til you see Dorcas." The door was slightly ajar as if it were any one's business to enter at will. The hall was long and narrow and bare and lighted only by a single globe far up in the ceiling.

But a good many of the cases of disturbed sleep in children are due to the lack of proper training. This will be dealt with in a subsequent article.

U. OF NEBRASKA STUDENTS REPAY LOANS WITHOUT FAIL LINCOLN, Neb. (AP)—Students loans are repaid by L. E. Gunderson, finance secretary of the University of Nebraska, as first class "paper."

In 20 years every loan made from funds under his supervision has been repaid with interest. These funds today total $56,000 and loans are limited to $100 for any one student in a semester.

Strict banking procedure is followed in collecting principal and interest. There are now 401 loans outstanding and the number made this year is the largest on record.

books on the table back of the divan, old, worn-looking books. But noting them, Kitty smiled. She'd pictured David lonely but no one could be lonely with so many books.

At one of the windows stood a desk and a typewriter, covered over with a wild confusion of loose sheets of paper. That was where David worked—probably he'd been working there when she telephoned.

"He came in to find her still smiling. "Fine—you're looking more like yourself, Kitty. Ready? There's a little place on the corner, not many frills to it—"

"I can recommend the beefsteak and french fries," David was saying. "I'm really not hungry." Yet when her dinner was set before her Kitty ate, because she knew it would please David if she ate.

"Now," David pushed his empty plate away from him. "I've been thinking, Kitty—" She had to interrupt him. "Oh, David, I'm so sorry to bother you like this. But you see I had to talk to some one."

But his extravagant hyperbole did not reassure her. She couldn't take her story to a stranger; David ought not to ask it of her! "David, I can't," she repeated miserably.

"Well, one thing, Kitty, I can't put you up tonight. Not that I wouldn't sit on the curb all night quite happy knowing that you were comfortable in my bed but my dear stepmother might not believe that I occupied the curb. Another thing, I can't advise you about getting work as well as Dorcas can. And we don't want to start off on the wrong foot, you see."

A painful flush had crept over Kitty's face. She had put David in an awkward position and now was balking his most reasonable way out of it. She nodded her head slowly in mute acceptance of his suggestion, averting her eyes as she did so.

But he only laughed. "Wait 'til you see Dorcas." The door was slightly ajar as if it were any one's business to enter at will.
