teeth is that they have not been kept clean and an excessive indulgence in sweets. The first teeth are neglected and the second permanent set are likely to be seriously injured because the gums become infected and form a poor soil in which to grow. Small cavities should be filled and teeth with large cavities extracted, health authorities say.
Decayed teeth interfere with proper mastication, digestion becomes more difficult, and also the absorption of poison from such teeth often cause pain in the muscles and may lead to diseased gums. Therefore, it is important that every child should have his own tooth brush and be taught to brush his teeth thoroughly every day, it is said. Defects of the teeth often have a very serious effect on health, not only do they interfere with digestion and appetite and also nutrition, but infection may extend to the tonsils, to the glands of the neck, to the ears, and to distant parts of the body.
Therefore, health experts say, the habit of visiting the dentist regularly should be formed early in life and the defects corrected before they can do serious harm.
Rinsing the mouth with lime water after brushing will help to make strong and healthy teeth. Baby teeth may be cleaned with a soft cloth and baking soda, and special care should be taken of the four large molars as they appear at the back of the baby teeth since they are permanent.
Guides to tooth health have been outlined and include several suggestions: visit a dentist every six months, brush the teeth on rising, after each meal and before going to bed, rinse the mouth with lime water, have all fissures and cavities filled, have crooked teeth straightened, give a child proper food for tooth development, guard a child's baby teeth as though they were permanent, do not let him have his finger or a pacifier in his mouth, and teach the child
