HOBBIES AND WHAT THEY ARE WORTH

It was recently our pleasure to hear a talk by a local citizen on the subject of collecting. The avocation is purely a sideline with the speaker, but from it he derives real pleasure.

Recently we heard of an editor in an Oregon city who has as his hobby the building of model airplanes. When the stress of business becomes boring he seeks rest and relaxation in his home workshop where he builds models of every type of plane that has ever been seen in the air.

A professional man of Coos Bay we are told has invested no small sum of money and often works until the wee small hours of the morning experimenting with numerous and sundry matters that are quite unrelated to his daily vocation.

Still another man of our acquaintance who occupies considerable space in the daily press reports it is our opinion that if more men and women had some hobby through which they could find relaxation from their daily routine the world would prove a haven of content.

Suicides and mentally broken men and women occupy considerable space in the daily press reports. It is our opinion that if more men and women had some hobby through which they could find relaxation from their daily routine the world would prove a haven of content.

There is genuine satisfaction in planting a tree, for with proper care we know it will outlive the one who plants it. It is a joy to return toward the close of life to the old home town and find the trees that were planted in the days of youth, and to know that they will long continue to lend their stately beauty to the world.

We gaze upon the fine old trees of our valley and thank the pioneers who planted them. We can do no less than to continue their good work. In viewing La Grande from Rooster Peak or Table Mountain we are impressed by the beauty of the trees; and in driving along our streets we appreciate them even more.

Trees are an inspiration to men; they help us to look up instead of down. They are sympathetic to our every mood, sometimes almost human. They enrich our lives. Let's make La Grande a city of trees.

Education is usually supposed to be something for youth. The word calls up visions of public schools, high schools and colleges, with more or less eager youngsters flocking in to learn what they may about the life that lies ahead of them.

But Professor Leon J. Richardson, director of the University of California Extension Division, points out that education for adults is one of the most important of the American university's tasks, and that extension courses for grown-ups are now being offered by nearly 450 American colleges and universities.

"By the modern theory," he says, "a nation must inevitably deteriorate unless it can depend on a body of citizens who continue to learn after school days are over and thus adapt themselves to the changing conditions of the world in which they live."

Opposition To Marvin Recall Move Continues

Considerable space was given to the Marvin recall movement in parts of the Wallowa county in this week's issues of the Wallowa Sun and the Joseph Herald. Last week stories appeared telling of the circulation of petitions and that the circulators were supposed to be telling signers their names would not become public.

The only trouble in the past has been where and when they used both metals without actual and adequate action in making the two metals equal and interchangeable. The main trouble was that two-thirds of the people in the world, with nothing but silver, were left entirely out of consideration.

The so-called "Gresham's law" has come to be the greatest obstacle for logical reasoning on this subject, because it is a said fact that few school teachers know enough to tell their pupils that this "law" is absolutely inapplicable if both metals are in the market.

Now, as "other benefits," it should be clear to all that when most of Asia, and other large areas in the world that now possess much of the silver in existence, and who have used nothing else for money, and are not as yet advanced to the use of credit or token money—that is, if for no other reason, we should remove silver so that it might improve their money and purchasing power, to facilitate commerce throughout the world.

CORRECTING SOME COMMON MISTAKES ABOUT THE SILVER QUESTION

Not long ago we read in the Nation an article by Mr. Henry Jones in which he shows a clear mind and erudition on the different theories of a managed money, but we deeply regret that he so utterly failed to do justice to the consideration of silver, but instead, in a passing manner, slightly made some erroneous statements and faulty conclusions that constrain us to offer a few thoughts on the subject, if you will be kind enough to give it space.

As one of many "currency schemes," Mr. Hadlitt says: "Bi-metallicism need not detain us long. Most of the present propaganda for it comes directly from their interests or from the senators from the silver-producing states." Again: "A bimetallic standard tends, in practice, to become an alternating standard." Then, again: "single standard." Then, again: "the operation of Gresham's law, etc." And further: "... Its other benefits are not clear."

From the time the United States resumed specie payment in 1875, until 1896, there was a constant agitation for the re-assumption of silver, and in the latter year both political parties advocated re-coinage; the Democrats unconditionally, the Republicans by international agreement, but the McKinley administration failed to take any action. Then, for a period of unprecedented heavy production of gold, the agitation slept, until recently, when the western nations awakened to the fact that gold was utterly inadequate to serve the enormously increased business of the world, and by actions in Great Britain, France and Belgium to place India, Ethiopia, etc., on the gold standard, the very depressed economic condition caused silver to decline until it lost 84 per cent of its original value. It was then that numerous economists, from all parts of the world, started to consider and agitate for favorable action on silver, which again aroused the silver interests in the United States so that the senate, last February, UNANIMOUSLY by resolution, requested the president to call international conferences to act to the end that silver may again attain the status of money.

As to bimetallicism becoming an alternating single standard, it is contrary to the experience of the world; in Great Britain from 1713 to 1816, and in France for 70 years, their money was far more stable than any other period in their history.
