izan arrested here last Friday at the request of the attorney general of the state of Missouri, was identified today by the police as John Long. They said this may be an alias. It was understood that the American authorities sought him as Martin Dewey, the kidnaper of Mrs. Nell Donnelly, wealthy garment manufacturer of Kansas City, Mo.

The man was arrested by four detectives who found him in bed. He was on an American ship when it arrived at Durban.

Dewey was a steamship operator and was charged with kidnaping Mrs. Donnelly, who was later released without payment of $75,000 ransom.

KITTY FREW

by JANE ABBOTT

was a mockery, now, those days of careful budgeting a joke. She had boasted to David that she wasn't afraid of Gar's mother. She was afraid. She pictured Gar going to her, every day, perhaps. Gar's mother was waiting, only biding her time until Gar realized his mistake, keeping him dependent upon her, feeding her sweet poison.

"I've been a fool, David," Kitty repeated. "Just because I had to turn my precious housekeeping over to Carley? Why, David, I've even tried to flirt with you! That night at the concert it annoyed me because you wouldn't talk to me. Until—David, it was funny, the way the music got me."

But there was no David there to answer because she was alone in the living-room of the little apartment, thinking, excusing that Kitty Frew she'd come to be.

"You see it's partly my fault. It goes back to that fuss I made at his mother's house. Poor Gar's afraid to tell me things that might make me angry. That's all it is. And of course I don't care—I mean about his taking Marge to the concert. Didn't I sit with you, there? And Gar would have been angry about that. And about the office—well, maybe he did go back. Old Jonathan wouldn't call me up to say he'd been mistaken about Gar's not coming in for the rest of the day. He isn't Gar's boss to know everything he's going to do. Oh, Gar's all right!"

And then Kitty would hold her head high as if to defy the David who couldn't hear her because he wasn't there. But she was still frightened. There were times when she shrank from Gar's caress, when her heart sank unreasonably at his homecoming. She never called him at the office or at rehearsals. When he told her she listened, thinking: "This isn't a lie," and hating herself because she had to so reassure herself.

When in the evening they went out with the others she was resolutely gay and kept herself from watching Marge and Gar. They were old friends, they'd known one another since they were children. And it was Marge's way to appropriate some one of the men and Gar's way always to be charming to any woman he was with. Of course there was nothing between them! It was absurd, absurd—Gar was hers.

She did not call David, now, on the telephone. She did not go to Dorcas' because there she might see him. She shrank from seeing him. He might guess the trouble she carried in her heart.

She went to Carol's more frequently. Carol needed her. The Russian "doo-dads" were not selling very well. She offered Carol a loan but Carol shook her head. "If it were your money, Kitty—" "Well, isn't it mine? What's Gar's is mine!" Kitty laughed. "If he earned it. Don't you know? Carol's question was significant.

"What do you mean?" And, instantly, Kitty was frightened. Carol laughed. "Why, mother gives him money every time he goes to the house! She pays most of your bills. I saw a lot of them on her desk that day I had the row. He'd just been there. Do you mean you didn't know it? Did you think you could live the way you do on what Gar earns—if you can call it that?"

Kitty had the sickening sensation of the floor swaying beneath her. When she spoke her voice sounded queer, brittle. "I knew that—that time. The bills had to be paid up, right away. We'd gone in a little too deep at Christmas time. Gar—just borrowed it."

"Borrowed it?" Carol's retort was scornful. "No, thanks, I'd rather starve than use any money she may have given Gar."

Well, she'd rather starve, too, than eat food bought by Mrs. Frew's money, thought Kitty hotly, helplessly. She remembered how easily Gar had assured her that the bills had been paid. And she could do nothing. She had to go on, humiliated to her soul, beaten. That was it—her fine satisfaction in their independence

Arizona Boy, In Mad Rage, Kills Father, Escapes

PHOENIX, Ariz., April 25 (AP) — Arizona's youngest "bad man" of record, 13-year-old Bobby Merrell, was being sought by posses of mounted officers and citizens today in the sparsely settled desert country lying between here and the Mexican border.

The youth late last night at Silver, southeast of here, shot and killed his father and wounded his mother and younger brother, according to county officials. Then, like most of the outlaws the western country has known, the youth quickly saddled his pony and galloped away into the wild, cactus-studded country. "Look out!" the youth shouted, and started firing, his mother said. She was wounded in the neck. The father, H. W. Merrell, 40, former mayor of Gilbert, fell with a bullet through his heart. An 11-year-old brother, Charles, was wounded in the hip.

Neighbors, hearing the pistol shots, rushed to the home. Bobby's horse was heard to gallop from the corral as they entered the house. The mother told Lloyd J. Andrews, county attorney, that the youth had never before given the family any trouble. She said the boy had gone to bed last night at his usual time, and had appeared with the pistol in the living room without warning.

"The boy is apparently raving mad—but just started shooting his family," said Andrews.
