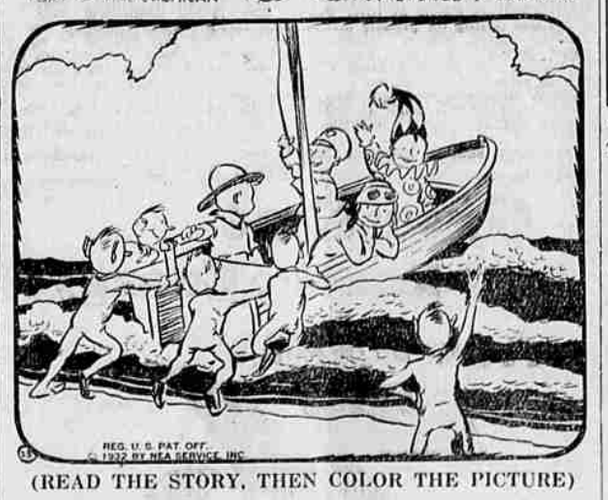
THE TINYMITES

STORY BY HAL COCHRAN PICTURES BY JOE KING



(READ THE STORY, THEN COLOR THE PICTURE)

THE boat began to look real fine. "The task of steering will be mine," said Duncy. "I am pretty good at doing things like that.

"If we're to sail across the sea, you all will be real safe with me. I wish, for this occasion, that I had a sailor's hat."

Then Scouty said, "If you're to steer, you'll shortly fill us all with fear. Let Windy do that task because he's tried it in the air.

"We'll let you hold the sail in tow, if you are sure you won't let go. At least we all will have a share to do that will be fair."

ON wooden horses stood the boat and Coppy said, "How will it float? I don't think we are strong enough to lift it to the ground.

"And, also, when we start away upon a merry trip today, I'd like to have a skinny tell us just where we are bound."

"Don't worry," said a skinny. "You will soon discover something new. The boat will sail along until you land upon an isle.

"Then pull the boat up on the sand and shortly you'll see something grand. I'd like to be along with you so I could watch you smile."

"NOW if you'll do just as I say, we'll have this boat upon it's way. All shove real hard. The boat will slip and fall into the sea."

The Tinies did as they were told and off the big boat shortly rolled. Just one more shove and then it floated, slick as slick could be.

"Get in, you Tinymites! Get in!" exclaimed a skinny, with a grin. And when the Tinies hopped aboard, the skinnies gathered 'round. They shoved and shoved as best they could and shortly Scouty shouted, "Good! We're floating on the water now and off to sea we're bound."
