Russian Painting Subject of Study

Russian painting was the subject for study by members of the Delphinian society at the meeting Wednesday at the Sacajawea Inn, with Mrs. E. E. Hurley as supervisor. As in literature, realism became the dominating tendency in Russian painting. Some of the highest achievements of realistic painting may be found in the canvases depicting scenes and moments of Russian history. Pictures of this type which were considered included "Ivan the Terrible and his Son" and "Cossacks writing to the Sultan of Turkey," by Repin; "Lady Morozov on the way to Prison" by Surikov and "Napoleon in Moscow" by Vereschagin.

Vereschagin pled for peace by showing the horrors of war. Repin endeavors to justify revolution by picturing the terrible oppression of the masses. His pictures hold something of the melancholy of Russian songs. Among his best known portraits are those of Rubenstein, the composer, and Count Leo Tolstoy, the writer. The next meeting, May 17, will reclose the year's study. There will be a banquet followed by a program on miniature painting, or the art of illumination.

DO YOU INHALE?

Here goes the last "sacred cow" in cigarette advertising!

INHALING has long been an "untouchable" subject taboo in the tobacco trade... a "sacred cow"! Why? . . . Because in every tobacco leaf—even the finest, the mildest—nature hides certain impurities which, when not removed, are unkind to delicate membranes!

And since, knowingly or unknowingly, we all inhale some part of the smoke from our cigarette—Lucky Strike developed that great scientific process which removes certain impurities. Luckies created that process. Only Luckies have it!

Do you inhale? Remember—more than 20,000 physicians, after Luckies had been furnished them for tests, basing their opinions on their smoking experience, stated that Luckies are less irritating to the throat than other cigarettes.
