Picking the PRESIDENTS 1856 - 1932

By Alexander R. George WASHINGTON (P) - Prohibition which promises to be one of the major issues in the current scramble for the presidency, made its first appearance in a national campaign just 80 years ago.

The Democrats had considerable difficulty deciding on a candidate. The party was virtually disrupted. They designated the Republicans as radicals and finally nominated Gov. Horatio Seymour of New York as a compromise candidate.

Grant defeated him by a majority of 305,000 votes, the electoral vote being 214 to 80. In 1873 Grant's nomination at Philadelphia was as easy. Horace Greely, founder of the New York Tribune, botched the Republican party, denouncing "carpet bag iniquities, administration corruption at home, and incompetence in foreign affairs."

Grant sat on the porch of his cottage placidly puffing a cigar, smoke through his black beard, while Greely campaigned in a costume of linen pants, black alpaca coat and liner duster. Grant received a plurality of 782,000 votes.

When Grant's administration ended the United States was in the midst of one of its longest business slumps. Old-timers recall the election of 1876 as one of the most sensational of all races for the presidency.

Samuel Tilden, New York Democrat, apparently had a plurality of 250,000 votes and 203 electoral votes against 186 for Rutherford B. Hayes, Republican of Ohio.

Election disputes developed. An electoral commission was appointed, which, on strict party lines, decided that Hayes had 185 electoral votes against 184 for Tilden.

This decision the Democrats described in the next campaign as "the great election fraud of 1876-77."

Ladies Night At Rotary Club To Be On Thursday

Rotarians are anticipating an evening of good fellowship and first class entertainment on the occasion of Annual Ladies' Night which is to be observed Thursday at 8:30 p. m. at the La Grande hotel.

The Rotarians and their wives and friends will start the evening right with a good old chicken dinner, and will then be in a proper mood to appreciate to the utmost the splendid program that has been prepared.

An unusual feature will be an interpretative dance by Miss Catherine Shartin, a member of the high school faculty. Another part of the entertainment that promises to be "different" is an exhibition of tumbling and acrobatics by some young men from the Normal school.

Music will play an important part in the program, too. Dick Lindsey is to play Raff's "Cavatina" and other selections which are sure to delight the audience. Paul Knuts will sing some solo numbers, and Winifred Scott and Eugene Schultz, the popular young singers from the Ackerman training school, will have some new ditties ready.

An interesting and entertaining talk is also promised, though the name of the speaker and the subject of his speech are unannounced as yet. These and other features will make the Rotary Ladies Night the biggest event of the year, and a special effort is being made to have 100 per cent attendance.

Gen. Ulysses S. Grant had things his own way in the presidential conventions and campaigns of 1868 and 1872. Below is depicted a scene at Crosby's Opera House in Chicago when he was nominated in 1868 by the Republicans whose slogan was "Grant and Victory."
