THE PROBLEM IN INDIA

More than a hundred persons have been killed and many more injured in riots occurring this week in India. Contrary to what one might expect, the opposition of natives to British rule has nothing to do with the reign of terror at Bombay and other Indian cities.

In India the natives are divided, racially, politically and religiously, into two factions, the Hindus and Moslems. The Hindus are numerically three times stronger. Religion causes most of the trouble. The cow is sacred to the Hindus and is never killed by them or eaten as food.

The Hindus have an irritating way of getting revenge, however. Moslems are Mohammedans, and as such hold their mosques in high veneration. Hindus, when they wish to be particularly insulting, organize a native "jazz band" and serenade their Moslem neighbors while the latter are gathered in prayer at one of their mosques.

Thousands of lives have been sacrificed and an enormous amount of property destroyed during the last decade. In religious outbreaks such as these, yet there are some, including Gandhi, who claim that India is ready for self government.

Order in India in all probability will depend on British troops for many years yet — unless England becomes disgusted and gives India up as a hopeless case.

It seems probable that no bids will be opened for construction of the $150,000 power plant to supply state institutions as the only provision made for payment for the plant is by diversion of the $27,000 a year now spent for power by the state to compensate the contractor on the installment plan, leaving him to finance himself ten years until the plant is paid for.

Another reason is that the Mesel plant proposal and the specifications is declared inadequate by engineers to generate the peak load necessary, and no provision is made for emergency supplementary service which will necessitate the state's purchasing other power and thus cut the revenues and jeopardize the contractor's investment.

The plans and specifications were prepared by a special committee designated by State Treasurer Holman, which ignored the reports of L. E. Kurtichanoff, consulting engineer of the board of control, and of the chief engineer of the public service commission. The engineers reported that the state was buying power for less than it would cost to produce it.

As the proposed plant would be inadequate for state needs and as power can be bought cheaper than small units can manufacture it, where does the economy to the state come in? This is not power "without cost to the taxpayer" but at an increased cost. The project cannot therefore be justified on either engineering or economical grounds and will be a waste of taxpayers' funds without resultant benefit — Salem Capital Journal.

WATCH WHEAT

It is never safe for anyone to give advice regarding the sale or holding of wheat, since conditions governing the price of such a commodity may be termed worldwide in nature. It is not out of place, however, to suggest to growers and dealers in wheat that they keep a close tab on market conditions this year. The reports which continue to come out indicate the possibility of favorable developments for growers. If such developments materialize this region will certainly be placed in a much more favorable economic position than has been the case lately.

The United States government's second estimate of winter wheat production for 1932 places the crop at 440,781,000 bushels. Last year the production was 787,465,000 bushels. If the prediction should be borne out, the 1932 winter wheat crop would be approximately 60 per cent that of last year.

The estimate of the spring wheat crop, 250,000,000 bushels, would bring out total national production to very little above domestic needs. Should there be any general failure of this crop, together with no improvement in the winter production, 1931 would be a year of virtually domestic production only in this nation.

Coupled with these estimates comes word from the government statisticians that only five states have prospects for crops of wheat better than the five-year average. Oregon and Washington are among the quintet. It does not take much figuring to see how growers of this region will fare if the present prospects go on to realization. "Watch wheat" ought to be a popular slogan.—Walla Walla Bulletin.

In Washington

By Herbert Plummer

WASHINGTON — Nothing thrills some members of congress more perhaps than to see a colleague, practically read out of his party by the "bosses" for something he has done, vindicate himself at the polls back home by being reelected.

There is, for example, the case of Louis T. McFadden, of Pennsylvania. McFadden, it will be remembered, is the stock, red-faced Republican who accused President Hoover, last December on the floor of the house during debate on the moratorium, of "selling out" to Germany.

Stripped of his patronage powers, pointedly ignored by the White House for a breakfast conference "for obvious reasons and by unanimous consent," and subjected to scathing denunciation from his colleagues, McFadden seems to have rather dim prospects for the future.

In the words of Senator Reed of Pennsylvania at the time: "We intend to act to all practical purposes as though McFadden had died."

UNDAUNTED

Not in the least outwardly remorseful, calmly inviting the house to investigate his charges, McFadden set out from Washington to his little home town of Canton to open his campaign for re-election and vindication.

Up and down the eight counties of his district he campaigned. Everywhere he told the voters that what he said on the floor of the house about the moratorium, he considered his duty.

Opposing him was the wife of Governor Pinchot, who had run against him before and whom he had defeated in the Republican primary by only 2000 votes.

"I was appearing in the performance of my official duty," he cried.

"the duty of every member to give information he has to the house, to the best interests of his constituents and his country."

GETS THE GLAD HAND

Apparently the voters of his district agreed with him. When the votes were counted in the primary McFadden had amassed some 4000 more than had Mrs. Pinchot.

But it was the reception accorded him informally on the floor of the house when he returned to Washington which probably meant the most to him.

The house was meeting in night session considering the economy bill. McFadden appeared in the rear of the chamber and started down the center aisle. Someone saw him and let up a whoop. Others took it up—on 8-4 sides.

He took his seat first on the Republican side, and then walked over to the democratic. Democrats on all sides grasped his hand. It became necessary to greet with both hands.

His face flushed and smiling in appreciation, he finally sat down and started the duties of a congressman just where he had left off.

Chats With Parents

A PRECOCOIOUS BOY

By Alice Judson Peale

At 12 Robert has adopted a gallant flirtatious attitude toward his mother's friends. He pays compliments, makes eyes at them and occasionally ventures what he believes to be a risque remark.

A thin, pale, tense child, his behavior is even more pathetic than it is unpleasant.

The trouble with Robert is that nobody pays him any attention. He wants affection but feels himself to be far too grown up, too much the man, to ask for it in a natural, childish way.

He patterns himself on the men he has seen and tries to put himself over as it seems to him that they do. He is simply a lonely little boy who has listened to too many adult conversations.

What he really needs is more affection from his mother, interest and companionship from his father, plenty of interesting things to do and friends of his own age with whom he can play.

But because no one takes the trouble to read the signs of his behavior, to understand what he needs and help him to get it, he becomes daily a more unpleasant, unhappy little boy.

This type of precocious behavior in boys and girls alike points usually to a lack of parental affection. Often the best solution where the parents for one reason or another seem unable to give their children the mothering and fathering they need, is to find for them some substitute parent person.

A sympathetic teacher, a club leader er or a play director to whom the child is drawn will at once not only temporarily fill the parent place but also will direct his attention back to the world of wholesome, childish interests.

PREVENTING TUBERCULOSIS—I

This year we celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the discovery of the tuberculosis germ. It was in 1882 that Robert Koch revealed the cause of the white plague.

In the intervening years we have made much progress in the control of tuberculosis, a substantial amount in its treatment and some progress in its prevention.

We are, however, as yet without a remedy for this still widely prevalent disease.

This fact merits strong emphasis, for, from time to time, charlatans, quacks and over-eager scientists startle the world with grossly premature announcements of a vaccine or serum cure for tuberculosis.

To conquer a disease it is not always necessary to find a remedy for it. Leproy was largely conquered in Europe by the invocation of a strict quarantine and in the United States we have effectively conquered typhoid by adequate control of sewage disposal and the sanitary control of our water supply.

Typhoid vaccination also has helped in eliminating typhoid as a major health problem.

None of these measures, however, in any way constituted a remedy for or a cure of typhoid.

In recent years progress has been made in the prevention of tuberculosis.

Our study of the nature of the tuberculosis germ and the manner in which it produces disease has revealed to us the fact that tuberculosis appears in its adult form where the lungs become involved in a destructive ulcerative process there is a preliminary nonactive stage.

In this stage of the disease the tuberculosis germ has invaded the body and has set up a local reaction at the place where it landed, principally in the lymph glands around the roots of the lung.
