Mrs. Moody Wins Women's Singles Title In Auteuil

AUTEUIL, France, June 6 (AP) — Henri Cochet, France, and the world's ranking tennis player, today won the French singles title for the fifth time, defeating George De Stefani, Italian Davis Cup player, in the final 6-0, 6-4, 4-6, 6-3.

AUTEUIL, France, June 6 (AP) — Helen Wills Moody has completed the first lap of her tennis drive toward all three of the world's major women's singles championships.

She won the French title in Roland Garros stadium yesterday, brushing aside Mme. René Mathieu of France, 7-5, 6-1, thus completing her brilliant march through Europe's best with the loss of a set.

Now Mrs. Moody will seek the British title at Wimbledon, starting June 20, and then will defend her American championship at Forest Hills later in the year.

The California ace twice has succeeded in winning all three championships in the same year. She has won the American title seven times; and the French and British crowns four times each but only in 1928 and 1929 did she win all three in the same year.

There does not appear to be any feminine player capable of taking a set from her right now although expert opinion was that she did not play as well here this year as she did in 1930 when she made her last trip to Auteuil.

Chats With Parents

DAWDLING

By Alice Judson Peale

The child who idly waves his sock over his head instead of putting it on, who plays with the soap instead of washing his hands, the one who answers the request to brush his teeth with a vague "In a minute"—these are well known to many mothers.

How do children acquire the dawdling habit? Usually it is the result of having been required to dress at too early an age or with too little help.

The child was expected to meet too high standards of speed and efficiency while his fingers were still clumsy and washing and dressing were to him long, difficult and complicated operations. He was nagged, scolded perhaps.

His dawdling is the expression of the negative atttude which resulted.

Sometimes the child learned that he could get extra attention if he dawdled. Mother would be sure to hang over him and urge and help him with every step.

Occasionally dawdling is just one expression of a negative attitude that shows in all the child's relations toward those who give him orders. It is just one way in which he finds that he can assert his independence to the annoyance of a too authoritative adult.

Dawdling can be avoided by never at any time making the washing and dressing tasks too difficult.

Helping the child a good deal through the first difficult stages of learning, taking the task out of his hands before he becomes really tired, praising him liberally for trying, allowing him to fumble through a new task without showing impatience or criticizing the imperfect result — all enable him in due time to acquire the desired promptness and efficiency.

Health

VITAMIN D

Of the various vitamins now known to science vitamin D is probably the one most widely appreciated by the public.

It has been demonstrated beyond any doubt that the absence of this vitamin induces rickets, a constitutional disease affecting the body as a whole, though most prominently shown in Curvature of the long bones, a peculiar distortion of the skull, and soft swelling of the joints.

Vitamin D is found in considerable quantities in oils and fats. It is abundant in cod liver oil and can be produced artificially.

An adequate supply of vitamin D is essential to normal development of the growing child's skeleton. Apparently it otherwise favorably affects the child's health.

Children suffering from rickets are known to be more susceptible to infections.

This has led Hess to state in his book on Rickets, Osteomalacia and Tetany that "Children never die of rickets, so that it does not enter into mortality statistics. The infants do not die of rickets, but of the infectious diseases which it has incited and intensified."

The question often is asked whether adults should take a course of vitamin D as a safeguard.

To this question Dr. McCollum replies that "the only logical answer is that there is little room for doubt that an additional source of the vitamin, especially during the colder months, affords a safeguard to health."

Because of the misinterpretation of a recently reported scientific observation, the impression prevails in some parts that an overdose of vitamin D is poisonous.

The amount of vitamin D required for well-being is astonishingly small, but the risk of consuming with our food too much of this vitamin is completely negligible.

There is not the slightest prospect that any of the foods or drugs now marketed for the prevention or treatment of rickets will give the consumer excessive and dangerous amounts of vitamin D.

World Debt Moratorium Declared; Moves Made To Combat Business Slump

1928 Since

WASHINGTON (AP) — Washington in truth became the "capital of the world" when President Hoover on that June day of 1931 made his sudden and dramatic proposal for a moratorium on intergovernmental debts and reparations.

The succeeding months were marked by visits of two of Europe's foremost statesmen — Premier Pierre Laval of France and the youthful Foreign Minister Dino Grandi of Italy. And two of America's statesmen — Secretary Henry L. Stimson and Andrew W. Mellon — were dispatched abroad to negotiate for the president.

Since 1924 Germany had borrowed some four billions of dollars of which more than two billion was furnished by the United States. In 1931 American citizens had a larger financial stake in Germany than the rest of the world combined.

Moratorium Proposed

Early in the summer of 1931 a "flight from the mark" began and panic threatened. To avert this and to protect American investors President Hoover proposed the moratorium as the first of a series of measures to remedy this situation.

When congress met in December President Hoover conveyed in a special message to both houses his views on debts and reparations. He was quick to point out that ". . . reparations is necessarily a wholly European problem with which we have no relation. . . ." And that he did not approve "in any remote sense of the cancellation of the debts to us."

He hinted, however, that it would be necessary in some cases to make still further adjustments, and accordingly urged congress to revive the commission which negotiated earlier debt settlements and give it authority to act in the "present economic emergency."

Conferences between European statesmen and President Herbert Hoover concerning world-wide economic ills focused the international spotlight on Washington in 1931. President Hoover is shown with Dino Grandi (center) and Secretary Stimson when the Italian foreign minister was visiting the capital.

Congress not only turned a deaf ear to this proposal, but gave sharp notice to the European governments not to expect a reduction of their debts "in any manner." However, the year's moratorium was approved.

Meanwhile new problems were arising to haunt the president. Great Britain went off the gold standard. Japan had entered Manchuria. The export of American goods had declined sharply. There was an evidence of hoarding of currency in the United States. And there were ugly rumors of the solvency of banks.

Party Leaders Confer

Confidence in general was waning to such an extent that on October 6, 1931, the president issued a call for a conference at the White House of the leaders of both parties.

This conference started moves that eventually resulted in a program designed to mobilize the country's resources for the fight against the business slump.

The Glass-Steagall banking bill was passed with changes in the federal reserve law.

Congress provided 125 millions for the federal land bank system.

The Reconstruction Finance corporation was set up with an initial operating fund of 500 millions.

To these proposals the president added the plan of the home discount banks and a nationwide campaign against hoarding.

An intensive campaign for decreased expenditures in government was put underway.

The cry of "balance the budget" was met by the house by passage of a revenue measure held sufficient for that purpose. After days of the bitterest warfare a proposed manufacturer's sales tax was defeated in the house and special excise taxes substituted.

After the house had finished with the budget-balancing legislation, another struggle over it was in store in the senate.
