

PLANT LIFE HAS ITS Jekyll AND Hyde's

Strange Ant-Eating Flowers That Look Like Orchids Shown Here

Beauty and the beast, incorporated in one organism, is the phenomenon presented by the Darlingtonia which is displayed at the Clark's Florist shop this week.

The Darlingtonia was found on Mt. Shasta, 8000 feet above sea level, and has been taken to Coos county where it became acclimated and grows at an elevation of 1700 feet.

The plant resembles the hooded cobra of the jungles of India, having no leaves, but stalks which are twisted and funnel shape, small at the bottom, growing larger with a rounded hood at the top from which hang two crimson and green appendages having the appearance of a whisker.

The top of the hood is mottled by white translucent areas through which the interior is lighted. Both the hood and appendages are covered with many honey glands which lure the insects toward the mouth under the hood.

The Darlingtonia is a perennial plant and can be grown in the house outside in shaded areas or in sunny soil, and propagate as strawberry plants, do, sending out little runners from the roots.

Darwin's theory is that they were formerly a sea plant feeding on fish and sea food but adapting themselves to the land as the sea gradually receded.

Fred Fox Loses Clerk Position In Union Vote

By Mrs. L. Z. Terrall (Observer Correspondent) UNION (Special)—Much interest was shown in the school election held at the high school yesterday afternoon and the largest vote in several years was polled.

A pretty wedding took place at the C. L. Caswell home in Union yesterday afternoon at 4 p. m. when his son Henry, and Helen Hall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Hall, were united in marriage by the Rev. R. C. Lee.

You Can't Marry

by Julia Clift-Addams SYNOPSIS: Her own happiness must be sacrificed for that of her cousin, George, Jenny Revelt decides for George. Her father, Mr. Revelt, is secretly married to Edna Townsend, but to prevent her employer, Blackmailing her, she has told him that Jenny is Edna's wife. Dr. Tallas suspects this trick.

Chapter 36 BLACKMAIL! "BECAUSE he's the Old Man!" George's laugh was curt, as her voice. "He never actually accused me of selling those figures to the Gortans crowd, so he feels he needn't apologize. But he wants me to know I'm vindicated, all the same!"

"I do like him so much," said Jenny softly. "Is he very ill? After I left he was going to see some doctors." "He's been ill for years, off and on, but that won't stop him living forever if he wants to, the old beast!"

Blackmail. Tallas would ask a heavy price.

"Well," said George, "how much?" "I can't give anything but money," "Can't you?" "George's pulse began to race. She waited. "Money isn't of so much use in the end, Mrs. Townsend—I beg your pardon—Miss Revelt. Money is only an end in itself. I'd never ask for money if I could have—information."

"I'd refuse five thousand if I thought I could find out what the estimate was that old Matching sent by air. Townsend took the document, you'll remember. And you'll remember, too, what the figures were. . . . Well?"

"Well?" repeated Tallas after a long, strange silence. "What were those figures that Townsend took?" "George stared down into her bag. She had left it open—not because she had any hope that the man would accept her money after all, but because it so happened that, as she sat, she started down at her weekly check and her wedding-ring; and it seemed so significant that just at this moment they should be together in the little leather compartment. The ring, certainly, was inside the lining, hidden there after the ceremony, but the outline of it was clearly visible. And the check was outside the lining, very crisp and clear.

"Well?" snapped Tallas. He sounded extremely nervous, but she knew that he would not yield an inch of his advantage. "I may say that I don't intend to wait about while you make up your mind. I mean, I'm not going to give you three hours or three weeks, or even three days. I want that information here and now or we'll go straight away to Matching and tell him all about last Saturday. No good saying that if I do that, I'm killing the goose that lays the golden eggs—I'll kill it, all right, and you and that little baggage of a cousin of yours can learn to be more civil in your manner to strangers."

"And no good saying that Matching probably knows already, because I'll give the news to the press and he'll have to take notice of it, then. And—"

George frowned. Fear and hatred were in her heart. Squaring people like Gill and Mrs. Bigger was one thing—this significant voice out of the air was quite another. Blackmail, no less. And, with those narrow-set eyes and thin mouth, Tallas would ask a heavy price.

Absorbed in her thoughts, she went down to the taxi and was driven downtown. The grill-room was certainly secluded. It held no one she knew. She thought she would choose a table not too much in a corner—and then she found that, early as she was, Tallas was earlier. He was standing smiling by a table in the most secluded corner of all.

She studied him as they sat down and discussed their dinner. He had the small eyes and the mean mouth of her recollection, and he looked worn and shabby as well.

"Do you want to see me on a matter of business?" she demanded as soon as the waiter had left them. "You can call it business." His hands worked nervously.

"Then you'll please let me pay my own bill," announced George calmly. "It's a rule I made years ago."

son Henry, and Helen Hall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Hall, were united in marriage by the Rev. R. C. Lee. The wedding march was played by Mrs. Edith Fy who later sang two solos, "Dawn" and "I Love You Truly." The bride was dressed in a blue crepe de chine dress and was attended by Betty Cadwell, sister of the groom. Harlan Hall, brother of the bride, acted as best man. Other attendants at the wedding were Mrs. Clara Johnson, grandmother of the bride, and Mr. and Mrs. Hall, C. L. and Miss Alice Cadwell. A wedding dinner was served after the ceremony and immediately afterwards the young couple left for Umatilla where they will be located until he finishes his work with the state highway commission.

The TINYMITES

THE big false heads the Tinymites had made lots of little youngsters glad they gathered 'round and watched wee Daney do some funny stunts.

He turned a funny cartwheel. Then fell down on trying it again. "Well, anyway," he shouted, "you'll admit I did it once."

Then one small tot said, "Let me try that false head on. I'll bet that I will also look quite funny." "Sure you can," kind Scouty said.

"Just stand real still. I'll help you, son, and you will have a lot of fun." The youngster very shortly had it safely on his head.
