

HOT LAKE PERSONALS

By Harriet Macdonald (Observer Correspondent) HOT LAKE (Special)—Four-year-old Doris Miller, daughter of John Miller, of Cove, received a distressing injury to her hand and spent a day in the hospital here last week. This small patient finished all who saw her by the smiling courage with which she met her pain.

Dr. Ray Murphy, of La Grande, who is suffering from a painful attack of acute arthritis, is steadily improving. Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Miller, of La Grande, accompanied by Miss Muriel McKinley, teacher of English in a Los Angeles high school, paid a visit to friends in the hospital on Monday evening.

On Thursday evening, Miss Helen Moor, Bess Duke, Lois Nelson and Dorothy Eberhard, all of La Grande, paid a visit to friends at the sanatorium. Mrs. Dorothea Johns recently had a brief but interesting trip to Yellowstone park. In driving to Idaho Falls for her son, Robert, she added two days to the trip and included the park.

Joe Murphy, accompanied by his sister, Miss Winnifred Murphy, of Los Angeles, and Miss Jesse DeViney and Miss Kathleen O'Rourke, of Hot Lake, spent the weekend at Spokane and vicinity. Two old friends of the sanatorium, Mrs. Fred Deno and Mrs. M. McConnell, of Caldwell, who had formerly spent many months at this place, made a brief call in passing. Mrs. Deno was on her way to Walltown lake and Mrs. McConnell was returning from her son's graduation from Idaho State college at Moscow.

"How neglectful of me!" apologized the cripple, "I am called Limpy Ashwood." "Sorry," Jerry shook his head thoughtfully. "That doesn't mean a thing to me. But as I started to explain, I do read the newspapers and I'm afraid that I've stumbled into a hornet's nest. There are a lot of people in this country who would like to be introduced to Miss Wentworth and One-shot Lucci, right now."

"Then I'm sure you'll understand," murmured Ashwood suavely, "why you may as well settle down to become a member in good standing of our little houseparty." Jerry grinned ruefully and nodded. Then he patted his dripping clothes suggestively. "A thousand pardons!" exclaimed the cripple. "Alfred, show Mr. Peabody to his room instantly. We'll complete the introductions at your convenience."

The first oblique shaft of morning sunlight snapped Jerry out of a sound night's sleep. For a moment he gazed in bewilderment around the plain, comfortably furnished room. Then, with a wide grin of anticipatory excitement, he leaped out of bed and strode to the window. The Gulf of Mexico was an infinitely vast lake of molten silver shimmering under the cloudless sky. Another hot day was indicated for not the slightest whisper of wind rippled the surface of the water. The palms leaned this way and that as though discouraged and weary. Their leaves were dry, browned at the tips.

No wonder, thought Jerry. These people were unattracting and ready to leap for one another's throats at the flicker of an eyelid. Never, even during those last hectic days at the front when pilots came in from patrol cursing at the tops of their voices, had he known such nervous tension.

All evening, as the "guests" had sat about the living room he had expected to witness a riotous outbreak among the fidgeting, taut-nerved men. Lucci and Mallory, their puffed and bristled faces covered with bandages, regarding each other with malevolent eyes, greedy for an opportunity to finish the struggle of the evening before. Those two strange, silent men, Martin and Williams, gazing steadily at Miss Wentworth with expressions in their sombre eyes which caused the flyer to watch them more closely than he did the others. Lucci and Mallory, what ever they may have been before coming to the island, were now savages, knowing it and not caring. But what damage the heat and the unnatural atmosphere of the place had done to Martin and Williams was not so evident. They would bear quiet watching.

That devil, Ashwood, had lounged in his chaise longue, playing upon their nerves as an organist manipulates his banks of keys. A dozen times during the hot, interminable evening, Jerry had tensed his muscles, expecting the victims of the cripple's thrusts to break into a murderous frenzy and run amuck. But always, at the very last instant before an outbreak, Ashwood would smooth the other's ruffled nerves and turn his attention to the next. Only two of all those who had dwelt in that house for many days seemed unmoved by his verbal efforts to arouse their anger. Hamilton, concentrating upon his everlasting solitaire, answered the cripple's quips carelessly, seeming to regard them as only slightly irritating interruptions to the vastly more important business of placing one card upon another. And Nancy somehow came through the evening unscathed. Ashwood's sallies in her direction did not cut to the raw. They were kinder, perhaps. At any rate, the girl held her own without great difficulty.

Jerry had not sought an opportunity to explain his presence to her. At dinner, he had surprised her studying his face thoughtfully and, meeting her eye, had seen her shake her head ever so slightly. Then, looking away, he knew that she recognized him and was warring with him to make no slip that would betray him.

It was with much regret that he gave up hope of drawing her aside for a few moments conversation before Emory and Stevens precipitated a battle royal. She could have told him how many guards patrolled the beach, how many machine guns could be expected to open fire upon the airplane and where, perhaps, would be the most likely place for him to start a row to take the defenders' attention away from the approaching monoplane.

He knew, of a certainty, that the extraordinary Ashwood did not believe his ingenious story of being cast away upon the neighboring island. He did not underestimate, in the least, the difficulties before him. Ashwood would be warned by his suspicious visit and would undoubtedly see that his guards did not relax their vigilance. This Ashwood was no highly-flighted morose; he was infinitely more dangerous as an enemy.

Jerry knew that the most practical plan would be to find some way to signal his friends to fly to the nearest town and secure adequate assistance from the authorities. But, being young, reckless and headstrong, he resolutely pushed the conviction away. Suddenly he stiffened in alarm. The familiar bark of a powerful motor beat into his ears. Its throbbing roar mounted as it responded to an advancing throttle until the entire house seemed to vibrate. Then, dying down, it popped and back-fired unevenly. Jerry's first impulse was to rush to the porch to signal to the silver-winged monoplane. But after the instant of indecision, he realized that he was listening to Ashwood's amphibian in her hangar at the inlet. He dressed hastily and hurried out into the fragrant morning air just in time to see the odd-shaped plane taxi slowly to the channel and take off toward the south. He stood on the porch, his hands clenching the rail, watching the amphibian's rising flight.

What a fool he had been to underestimate Ashwood's shrewdness and not to know that he would make an effort to check up on his story! If the amphibian continued on her present course for five minutes her crew could not fail to see the monoplane, whose bright wings would loom up in the sand like an alt marker thoughtfully placed there to draw attention to the spot. The white-coated steward appeared at Jerry's side and bowed civilly. "Mr. Ashwood's compliments, sir, and will the gentleman kindly join him at breakfast?" Jerry hesitated. He wished to watch the course of the amphibian. But the steward waited as though he expected the summons to be obeyed immediately, so the pilot nodded reluctantly and entered the house.

Man Advertisises For Wife; Sends $500; Meets Boat

MONTECAL, July 15 (AP)—Here is the story of a man, a woman and a photograph. Henry Prysky came from one of the Central European countries to Quebec some years ago, took up land, cleared it and, in time, built himself a cottage. He said to himself, "Now, the only thing lacking is a wife. A good, strong girl from the old country, one who isn't afraid of hard work." He wrote out an advertisement and sent it to a newspaper in his home country. The result was a deluge of applications. All the girls—except one—described their qualifications. They could milk cows, drive a plow or pull it, if need be; they could make butter, bake bread and they knew how to cook, scrub and sew.

But the letter which caught his bachelor fancy promised none of these things. It was "beautifully written," as he said later. He answered it, asking for a photograph of the writer. A photograph arrived and completed the conquest which the letter had begun. The next letter from the old country said the girl was ready to leave for Canada at any time, but would Henry send $500 with her ticket so she could buy a little trousseau. Henry would, and did. When the ship on which she was to sail reached Quebec he was at the docks. But the bride was not on board. Henry took his troubles to a lawyer. "You have a picture of the lady?" the lawyer asked. "Let me see it." Henry handed it over. It was a photograph of Greta Garbo.

HE KILLED A SNAKE

GENERAL GRANT NATIONAL PARK, July 15 (AP)—W. Baumann killed a snake. Nothing to boast about, of course. He just up and killed it while he was examining a water flume. It was a rattler. Then he walked on down the flume a piece. Presently he returned, spotted the snake. Might be a good idea, he ruminated, to cut out the rattles and save 'em. He leaped over, picked it up. That is, to be truthful, he almost picked it up. The snake buzzed. Baumann jumped, and quite some distance. The snake glided off. The snake he had killed lay ten feet away.

SHOWALTER SHOWS THEM NO FUMBLING FROM HIM

GEORGETOWN, Ky. (AP)—Bill Terry of the New York Giants couldn't have fumbled first base better than John Showalter of the Georgetown A. C. in a game here against the Farm Sport Club. Showalter did not handle the ball in all of the nine innings. Georgetown required to win, 2-1. All put-outs were the result of flyballs, strikeouts or forced outs. The pitcher did not attempt to snag a single runner off first and no fair or foul balls were batted toward first.

Gambler's Throw by Eustace L. Adams

SYNOPSIS: Jerry Calhoun who has been trailing Limpy Ashwood's gang of kidnapers, arrives at Ashwood's island headquarters, hoping to be released. He has been to a nearby island with a detective and a friend. Ashwood is holding prisoner Nancy Wentworth, abducted over Jerry's defense, and five men.

Chapter 17 HORNET'S NEST

"I've been reading the newspapers, Mr.—but you haven't introduced yourself," said Jerry. "How neglectful of me!" apologized the cripple, "I am called Limpy Ashwood."

"Sorry," Jerry shook his head thoughtfully. "That doesn't mean a thing to me. But as I started to explain, I do read the newspapers and I'm afraid that I've stumbled into a hornet's nest. There are a lot of people in this country who would like to be introduced to Miss Wentworth and One-shot Lucci, right now."

"Then I'm sure you'll understand," murmured Ashwood suavely, "why you may as well settle down to become a member in good standing of our little houseparty." Jerry grinned ruefully and nodded. Then he patted his dripping clothes suggestively. "A thousand pardons!" exclaimed the cripple. "Alfred, show Mr. Peabody to his room instantly. We'll complete the introductions at your convenience."

The first oblique shaft of morning sunlight snapped Jerry out of a sound night's sleep. For a moment he gazed in bewilderment around the plain, comfortably furnished room. Then, with a wide grin of anticipatory excitement, he leaped out of bed and strode to the window. The Gulf of Mexico was an infinitely vast lake of molten silver shimmering under the cloudless sky. Another hot day was indicated for not the slightest whisper of wind rippled the surface of the water. The palms leaned this way and that as though discouraged and weary. Their leaves were dry, browned at the tips.

No wonder, thought Jerry. These people were unattracting and ready to leap for one another's throats at the flicker of an eyelid. Never, even during those last hectic days at the front when pilots came in from patrol cursing at the tops of their voices, had he known such nervous tension.

All evening, as the "guests" had sat about the living room he had expected to witness a riotous outbreak among the fidgeting, taut-nerved men. Lucci and Mallory, their puffed and bristled faces covered with bandages, regarding each other with malevolent eyes, greedy for an opportunity to finish the struggle of the evening before. Those two strange, silent men, Martin and Williams, gazing steadily at Miss Wentworth with expressions in their sombre eyes which caused the flyer to watch them more closely than he did the others. Lucci and Mallory, whatever they may have been before coming to the island, were now savages, knowing it and not caring. But what damage the heat and the unnatural atmosphere of the place had done to Martin and Williams was not so evident. They would bear quiet watching.

That devil, Ashwood, had lounged in his chaise longue, playing upon their nerves as an organist manipulates his banks of keys. A dozen times during the hot, interminable evening, Jerry had tensed his muscles, expecting the victims of the cripple's thrusts to break into a murderous frenzy and run amuck. But always, at the very last instant before an outbreak, Ashwood would smooth the other's ruffled nerves and turn his attention to the next. Only two of all those who had dwelt in that house for many days seemed unmoved by his verbal efforts to arouse their anger. Hamilton, concentrating upon his everlasting solitaire, answered the cripple's quips carelessly, seeming to regard them as only slightly irritating interruptions to the vastly more important business of placing one card upon another. And Nancy somehow came through the evening unscathed. Ashwood's sallies in her direction did not cut to the raw. They were kinder, perhaps. At any rate, the girl held her own without great difficulty.

Jerry had not sought an opportunity to explain his presence to her. At dinner, he had surprised her studying his face thoughtfully and, meeting her eye, had seen her shake her head ever so slightly. Then, looking away, he knew that she recognized him and was warring with him to make no slip that would betray him.

It was with much regret that he gave up hope of drawing her aside for a few moments conversation before Emory and Stevens precipitated a battle royal. She could have told him how many guards patrolled the beach, how many machine guns could be expected to open fire upon the airplane and where, perhaps, would be the most likely place for him to start a row to take the defenders' attention away from the approaching monoplane.

He knew, of a certainty, that the extraordinary Ashwood did not believe his ingenious story of being cast away upon the neighboring island. He did not underestimate, in the least, the difficulties before him. Ashwood would be warned by his suspicious visit and would undoubtedly see that his guards did not relax their vigilance. This Ashwood was no highly-flighted morose; he was infinitely more dangerous as an enemy.

But, being young, reckless and headstrong, he resolutely pushed the conviction away. Suddenly he stiffened in alarm. The familiar bark of a powerful motor beat into his ears. Its throbbing roar mounted as it responded to an advancing throttle until the entire house seemed to vibrate. Then, dying down, it popped and back-fired unevenly. Jerry's first impulse was to rush to the porch to signal to the silver-winged monoplane. The TINNITES! STORY BY HAL COCHRAN PICTURES BY JOE KING

(READ THE STORY, THEN COLOR THE PICTURE)

As smiles spread on wee Duncy's face, the girl said, "I will get a vase and put this bouquet in it so the flowers will last real long." "The odor of them seems real sweet. I hope that you think them a treat and that they'll help you get real well and grow to be real strong." "Of course I'll get real strong again. I get in mixups now and then, but always come right out of it," said Duncy, with a grin. "Why, I have traveled 'round the world and into thrilling things been hurled. You'd be surprised, miss, if you knew of every place I've been." THEN Windy spoke up, "Gee, I said he, 'I know where I would like to be. Away up in the drifting clouds, just floating in a plane.' 'I wish you all were with me, too. Sky flying is real fun to do. But, what's the use of wishing when your wishing is in vain?' It wasn't very long until brave Duncy said, 'I've had my fill of staying in this little bed. I wish I could get out.' 'I'm getting better right along. Out in the air's where I belong. Please ask the doctor, someone He will let me up, no doubt.' 'WELL, I don't know,' someone replied. 'But Mister Doctor's right outside. I'll call him in and ask him, though he may turn you down flat.' The doctor came and promptly said, 'If you want fresh air, go ahead and ride in my big wheel chair. There will be no harm in that.' The chair was pushed out by the bunch. Then someone had the happy hunch to hitch a goat up to it. 'Say! That's dandy,' Duncy cried. The goat was hitched up very quick and Duncy's ride turned out real slick. It wasn't long till all the rest insisted on a ride. (Copyright, 1932, NEA Service, Inc.)
