Decrease in Egg Supply Building Firm Undertone

PORTLAND, July 27 (AP)—Strength of the egg market price appears due chiefly to the very liberal decrease in the supply at leading trade centers of the country. While price changes are not at all liberal, or even frequent, general undertone of the trade appears more hopeful each day.

Advance of 1c in the price named by the Pacific co-ops is now being noted or less generally followed by the trade here although some of the big stores are reported as still buying 1c to 2c below the established list. This is not being done by the local co-ops.

Recent decrease in the fresh egg supply here has been the most marked of the season to date but much the same condition has been shown in the country generally. Receipts this season show an even greater decrease than has been generally anticipated. The decrease in storage stocks along the coast during the week indicated that short held stuff was being moved out of coolers.

Trading in the butter market is holding firm with no change in the local price on either prints or cubes for the day. Butterfat reflects a stronger tone.

Killers report plenty of live chickens arriving to take care of all wants of the trade. Prices appear steady with light spots in best call in all divisions.

While the market appears a trifle slow for heavy weight sorts, top quality light calves are moving out well within the price range. Hogs and lambs are just about steady with slowness in spots.

Cantaloupes are now arriving from The Dalles and from Yakima and are generally reported of good quality. With a further slash in California values.

Market is congested with cucumbers from The Dalles with some receipts selling boxes down to 20c, a new low point here. Fancy stuff is bringing 40c in a very limited way.

Strength is generally retained in the market for tomatoes. A better movement is shown out of The Dalles and Yakima but demand is good with a very small supply of Californian here.

With California Gravenstein apples, properly packed, selling down to 75c box on the track here, the low point for an extended period had been reached. Early locals are selling around 65c to 70c box to retailers.

Notes of wholesale trading: Onion market is weaker with some sales lower.

Northwest early peaches are draggy with very low prices.

Applicants are a trifle weaker and lower in spots. Green corn is still active and practically unchanged in price.

Markets overstocked with coast all-weather salmon, mostly 8c, as are troll chinook. Columbia chinook scarce.

Crabs in very liberal offerings with a price spread of $1.50 to $2.00 3 doz according to size.

Marshals for 70 years

CADIZ, Ohio (AP)—Seventy years ago William Mitchell was a deputy town marshal and watched the coming and going of union soldiers who were encamped at the fair grounds. Today Mitchell still is a town marshal and watches national guard troops on duty in Ohio's mine strike.

Mitchell has been connected in one way or another with the town government for 70 years and has worn a marshal's star continuously for 40 years.

Gambler's Throw by Eustace L. Adams

SYNOPSIS: "Murry me," Jerry Calhoun tells Nancy Weitcher what she says that Lucy Ashwood, the gangster who is keeping her and four men on an island for ransom, is threatened to make her become his wife. Jerry Emory battles and Stevens have been captured, while trying to rescue the prisoners.

Chapter 26 A THOUSAND DEVILS

THE three stared at Jerry as though he had lost his mind. He sifted loose sand through his fingers, not looking up. "Of course," he continued slowly, "you understand that the marriage would be in name only. If we ever get back to civilization we could all work together and have it quietly annulled. Steve and Emory would be witnesses to prove that it had been done as the lesser of two evils."

A thousand devils were grinning from Emory's dancing eyes as he glanced from the sober-faced, flushed Nancy to the embarrassed Jerry. "Fine scheme, if you ask me," Stevens said hastily. "You probably won't have to worry about a divorce, or an annulment, either, because if you aren't a widow by the time you leave here, it won't be Jerry's fault. He's more anxious to go and get himself killed than any feller I ever saw—unless it's his addle-headed running mate, here."

Jerry's ears burned as he saw the girl survey him thoughtfully. He had never been much of a ladies' man. But he did feel foolish, somehow. Talking about even this kind of a marriage as though they were discussing a missing engine or a spavined horse. A small hand suddenly rested upon his knee. He looked up to see Nancy smiling at him through tear-washed eyes.

"You are a dear boy, Jerry, and I trust you," she said, simply. "I'll leave all the details to you three." She rose and walked rapidly toward the house. Emory broke into a chuckle. Jerry glared at him. "What are you laughing at, you say? I've got a good mind to poke you in the nose!" "I'm laughing out of pure relief," gasped Emory. "That I wasn't the fair-haired fiddle who thought of that wonderful scheme! Oh boy! Our little Jerry, restless wanderer of the air trails, married!"

"Shut up!" growled Jerry morosely. "Didn't you hear the conversation?" "Sure, I heard it," Emory's grin was maddening. "Didn't you hear me say that the marriage would be in name only?" "Sure, oh sure, we heard it, didn't we, Steve?" The detective's eyes were twinkling, but his face was impassive. "Well, then don't be an ass!" muttered Jerry.

"I heard you say it," glibbed Emory, "but it didn't mean anything, you wait." "It's just because I have a wonderful control over my temper," observed Jerry wistfully, "that I don't beat you up. I'd do it right now if we had any privacy." He rose and strode toward the house, very much on his dignity. The majestic majesty of his retreat was not made easier by the sound of Emory's raucous laughter which followed him all the way to the porch steps.

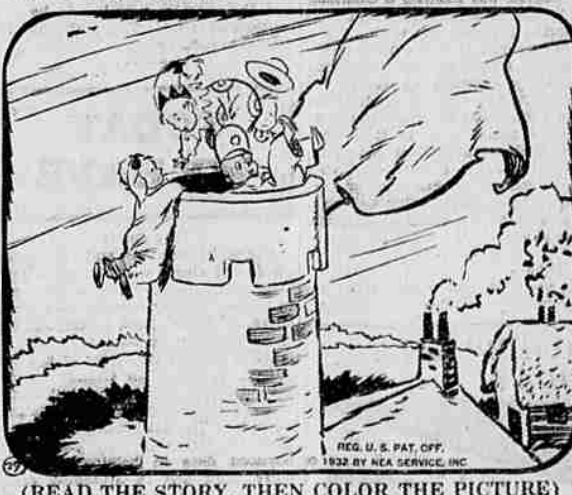

An almost unbearable aura of uneasiness pervaded everything within the house, blended with the heat waves that rose in shimmering layers from the parched sand outside, made an atmosphere surcharged with electricity. Jerry felt that if a door were to be slammed, each man within that huge, darkened living room would leap for his neighbor's throat.

Nancy was the only one who, after dinner that evening, braved the torrid heat of her own room. The others in the living room had settled down to wait, as patiently as might be, through endless hours until bedtime. Jerry, Emory and Stevens sat close together, the flyers attempting to read, the old man mildly watching the others with eyes that scarcely seemed to see what they were looking at. Hamilton was placidly shuffling his cards and placing them in neat rows and columns upon the green baize table top. Mallory, a highball on the arm of his chair, was alternately drinking and dozing. Lucel, sitting bolt upright in a straight chair, was finding the inactivity almost insupportable. He strode to the door with irritating regularity, peering out to see if the hoped-for evening breeze had risen. Then he returned to the chair to sit, chafing and sweating, waiting for something to happen. Martin, unobtrusive as usual, was half-hidden in a dark corner. He shuffled his feet incessantly, unconsciously. Jerry found the noise irritating. Even Ashwood, stretched out in a chaise longue of Philippine wicker, seemed moody and dispirited.

The TINNITES! STORY BY HAL COCHRAN PICTURES BY JOE KING

(READ THE STORY, THEN COLOR THE PICTURE)

THE canvas that had left the ground and now was sailing round and round, still held the hand of Tinies. They were hanging on real tight. At first they all were very scared. Soon Scouty said, "I guess we've fared real well and, if we stay up here, I think we'll be all right."

"This spread of canvas seems just like a magic carpet. I'm a tike who likes things that are thrilling. This is thrilling as can be." "We don't know where we're heading for, as through the air we gently soar, but we may soon land some place which we'll all be glad to see."

"WELL, I'm still frightened quite a bit," said Duncy. "Cause, from where I sit, all I can see is ground below, and it's quit far from here." "If this canvas decides to stop, we'll very likely take a fop, and then what's going to happen? That is what fills me with fear." "Why look ahead and worry, lad!" said Windy. "Gee, you should be glad that, thus far, we are safe and sound. Let's just hope for the best." "Right now we're floating on the breeze, enjoying life with ut most ease. We may as well all stretch right out and take a little rest."
