

LEAP YEAR BRIDE

By LAURA LOU BROOKMAN (Copyright 1932) (By NEA Service Inc.)

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Cherry Dixon, pretty, 19, tells her mother she is going to a club meeting but instead meets Dan Phillips, reporter on the Wellington News. Cherry has few friends because her wealthy parents consider most of the other young people of the town socially inferior. She has become acquainted with Phillips without her parents' knowledge.

CHAPTER V "What's the meaning of this?" Walter J. Dixon demanded. His accusing eyes were on his daughter. No one spoke for an instant no one moved. Dixon was tall man—just under six feet. He was sturdy built though not "heavy." His handsome features, usually set in a mold of rigid dignity, were alive with anger now. Older than his wife, Walter Dixon looked younger. The silvered hair lent distinction rather than age. The blue eyes snapped, turned from his daughter to his wife.

she asked. "Here—read it! Read it and let me hear what you have to say for yourself! Look at your picture—plastered over every cheap news sheet in the city—" There was the photograph of Cherry beneath the glaring headlines. It was a photograph made a year before during commencement at Miss Rathburn's School. Cherry wore a gown of floating organdie and broad-brimmed picture hat. She was like a charming wood nymph come to life. The face, sweetly serious, beneath the hat brim was child-like in its innocence. Certainly it was incongruous to see such a picture beneath the heavy black type, "Society Girl Injured in Shooting."

I know how you must feel—" "Will you please come to the point and say what you have to say?" "Well, have you anything to say for yourself?" "I'm sorry, Father." "Shouldn't you be ashamed?" "But you shouldn't have said what you did to Dan. It wasn't his fault—" "Stop! Not another word, Cherry. You amaze me! Do you mean to stand there and tell me—your own father—that I should say to a young puppy with the impudence to come into a house where he's not wanted? Go to your room and see if Sarah can make you presentable before Dr. Knowles comes. And try to improve your manners!"

not. I supposed you were exercising some control over your daughter. Knew where she went when she left the house." "I've tried to, Walter! Oh, this is so dreadful. I just can't believe it. I can't believe our Cherry could do such things!" "She's not going to." Dixon snapped. "Not again. I've given her orders never to see that reporter again and I want you to see that she obeys!" "Yes, Walter. Of course."

Dr. Knowles, when he arrived declared there was nothing to be done for the injured arm. It had been properly dressed. There was no reason to be alarmed. The doctor said he would call the next day and change the dressing. Meanwhile Cherry should have rest. She seemed nervous and upset. It was the shock he doubted.

The TINY MITES

(READ THE STORY, THEN COLOR THE PICTURE) THE Tines laughed aloud to see how cute a little monk could be. The one that pulled wee Duncy in the cart was jumping round. "Hey! Please go straight," scared Duncy cried. "I do not want a thrilling ride. If you keep racing here and there, 'twill flop me to the ground." "Perhaps the monk will then go slow. 'Twill be a real good load, you know." "All right! I'm game, if all of you are willing," Duncy cried.
