and buying securities and commodities that "can, by the expedient of moving elsewhere, avoid regulation in any given state."

Restriction on federal reserve banks "in accordance with the original plans and earlier practices."

Makes Promise—Mr. Roosevelt promised "it will no longer be possible for international bankers, or others, to sell foreign securities on the implied understanding that these securities have been approved or approved by a state department or any other agency of the federal government."

Continuing, Mr. Roosevelt told his audience that "this assurance which I am here giving you is to my mind more important than all other remedies."

Restored confidence in the actions and statements or executive authority is indispensable. This administration has risked the lives and property and welfare of the people through a policy of disastrous governmental speculation.

"It is no wonder," he said, "there is stagnation born of fear. This is a distrust not of ourselves. Not of fundamental soundness. Not in our innate ability to work out our future. It is a distrust of our leaders—in the things they say and the things they do."

The kind of confidence we most need is confidence in the integrity, the soundness, the liberalism, the vision and the old fashioned horse sense of our national leadership. Without that kind of confidence we are forever insecure. With it the future is ours to conquer."

Mr. Roosevelt asserted that his economical remedial measures "like my whole theory of the conduct of government, are based on telling the truth."

"Government," he said, "cannot prevent some individuals from making errors of judgment, but government can prevent to a very great degree the foolishness of sensible people through misstatements and through the withholding of information on the part of private organizations great and small which seek to sell investments to the people." The New York governor regretted that he had to criticize Republican leadership policies, "but," he said, "to build we must first clear the ground."

"We must find out why the present Republican leadership built so unwisely."

Both platforms and speeches of acceptance of both candidates at least have agreed that the major issues in this campaign is the economic situation, he said.

"I propose to show that the Republican leadership," he asserted, "misunderstood the forces which were involved in the economic life of the country, that it encouraged a vast speculative boom and that when the reckoning came the administration was not frank—not honest—with the people, and by blundering statements and actions postponed necessary adjustments. This prolonged and deepened the depression."

Roosevelt asserted the Hoover policy for allying government and business is a wide departure from the Republican tradition as voiced by President Harding's slogan of less government, less business.

"Republicans everywhere should see this," he went on, "it is completely alien to the traditions of the party. The coincidence of the two policies is a dangerous mixture of fire and powder. This is the tragic policy of the past four years."

Before the election of Mr. Hoover, his rival for the presidency, he said, "a terrible race began between the rising tide of bubble fortune in the stock market and the rising tide of unemployment."

"Nevertheless we were, said Mr. Hoover, on the verge of the great commercial expansion in history. High wages would create new consuming power, accelerated mass production would lower costs. Buy more; own more; spend more! This was the program."

"It was the hey-day of promoters, oligarchs, multimillionaires, opportunists, adventurers of all kinds."

In this mad whirl, Mr. Roosevelt said, Mr. Hoover's campaign was launched. "Perhaps," he added, referring to President Coolidge, "forecasting it, a crowd man from New England while the cool detachment of the Dakota hills, typed on a narrow slip of paper 'I do not choose to run.'"

He went on to recite that surpluses were to be marketed abroad and buying nations were to be financed by loans from the United States. The Democratic nominee said Mr. Hoover dismissed the economic obstacles of higher tariffs retarding foreign trade with the assertion, "this theory was sound enough in the old days of barter" but not today, and so, listening to Republican leaders, the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill was passed.

The president hesitated, Mr. Roosevelt told his audience, because he must have seen the awful nature of the choice. But his courage failed. "No," he said, "his courage failed. No, his courage failed. No, his courage failed."

He quoted from Mr. Hoover's remarks during 1920 and 1930 to support his contention that the administration was not truthful about the depression.

Finally on Dec. 2, 1930 it was announced "we have already weathered the worst of the storm." "And then," added Roosevelt, "as the depression steadily deepened, all was silence."

"We could no longer be ignored and 'an excuse' was found," he said, "Washington discovered that the depression came from abroad—an excuse which the president still maintained in his acceptance speech last week."

Containing there is no relief in continuing the Hoover administration, Mr. Roosevelt asked "has the Republican elephant, spotted with mire through which he has wandered blindly during these last four years, suddenly, by miracle, overnight, become a sacred white elephant of spotless purity, or has he been scrubbed and whitewashed by cunning showmen in the hope they can deceive a credulous electorate for four years more?"

Dissecting the Hoover exposition of the doctrine of American individualism, the candidate said "appraising the situation in the bitter dawn" of a cold morning after.

"Two-thirds of American industry concentrated in a few hundred corporations and actually managed by no more than 5000 men."

"Half of the savings of the country invested in corporation stocks and bonds and made the sport of the American stock markets."

banking houses directing the flow of American capital within the country and to those backward and crippled nations on which the president built so heavily."

night and decided to fly to Montreal this afternoon to watch the Canadian air pageant.

His westward crossing of the Atlantic was "the toughest flight" he ever made, he said, and he was "jolly well all in." He talked by transatlantic telephone with Amy Johnson, his bride of three weeks and himself, noted distance flier, and she promised to sail today for New York to join him. He said, however, she would not accompany him on his return flight from New York to London.

May Not Come West—Advice from London later today said, however, that Mrs. Mollison would not come to America at all.

"It was lucky," he said, "for hours at a stretch on the way across the Atlantic I couldn't see the water below me and I didn't know whether the wind was changing and blowing me off my course. I allowed seven degrees for drift and my calculations have been about right because when I came over land it wasn't 10 minutes before I sighted Harbor Grace."

He decided to make the flight, he said, only because it had been planned for six months.

"I just got married three weeks ago," he explained, "and if this flight hadn't been planned so long I would have waited a while."

"There were people who predicted I wouldn't be able to get off the ground with my small plane and its 170-gallon load of gasoline and the amount I was carrying did prevent me from rising above the cloud banks. The greatest altitude I reached was 7000 feet."

"I'm going to fly the same plane back," he said, "but I think the return trip will be easy. Flying eastward one has favorable aspects as there is nothing to worry about except the possibility of motor trouble, and that is a very faint possibility indeed."

Mollison gave up entirely his original plan to make the round trip from Britain to New York and back again in less than three days. After flying to New York Sunday he will wait for his wife to arrive and rest up before attempting the return trip.

Hearing Affected—His hearing was so affected by the continuous roar of the motor that he was unable to accept dozens of telephone calls which came to him at the farm home near Penfield Ridge, where he went for a cup of tea after he landed. The farmer who took him in, Raymond Hawkins, had to do the talking for him.

Mollison was credited today with four new aviation records through his present flight—the first flier to fly westward solo over the Atlantic ocean; the shortest time from land to land on a westward crossing; the first transatlantic flight in a light plane, and the longest duration flight in a small plane.

AMY RECONSIDERS LONDON, Aug. 20 (AP)—Amy Johnson, British woman flier and bride of J. A. Mollison, who landed in New Brunswick yesterday after a flight from Portmanock, Ireland, reconsidered today her decision to sail for New York to join him.

Yesterday she announced she would sail today, but this was cancelled and it seemed unlikely she would go at all.

Her secretary said she had not slept for three nights because of anxiety for her husband and that she still did not consider the anxiety ended until he had completed his return flight from New York to London.

MONTREAL PLANS WELCOME MONTREAL, Aug. 20 (AP)—Montreal prepared today to extend a tumultuous welcome to J. A. Mollison, transatlantic flier when he flies here from St. John, N. B., for the air pageant this afternoon.

He is to be guest of honor at civic luncheon at Saint John and to leave immediately afterward for Penfield Ridge, where he left his little airplane overnight.

Christian Science Hymnal Contract Keeps Plant Busy (From Kingsport (Tenn.) Times)

The Kingsport Press, Incorporated has received the largest known single order of hymnals ever placed with a single concern. The order was placed by The Christian Science Publishing Society of Boston.

The order consists of 400,000 cloth-bound books and 10,000 de luxe full leather bound books. The books will be distributed throughout the world. It is expected the distribution will begin about Sept. 1.

The music plates for the 640-page hymnal were prepared by the F. H. Gilson Company of Boston, nationally known music composers. All of the type for the plates was set by hand.

E. W. Palmer, president of the local plant, said some idea of the magnitude of the order could be obtained by the quantity of material and time necessary for the completion of the book. Five of the largest perfecting presses of the Kingsport Press began work on printing the book June 15 and will run 20 hours each day until Aug. 23, at which time the printing is expected to be complete.

A total of 325 tons of paper will be used in the book, 40,240 yards of book cloth, 39,900 yards of head material, 50 tons of end paper material, and more than 210,000 yards of printing reinforcement for the backs of the books.

Mr. Palmer said probably the most outstanding part of the manufacturing process will be the use of more than 500,000 sheets of 22-carat gold for the stamping on the cloth-bound edition and gilding the edges and stamping the de luxe edition. Mr. Palmer estimated the cost of the gold alone at $12,500.

Cube Butter Is Down Half Cent; Eggs Unchanged

PORTLAND, Aug. 20 (AP)—The out of 1/2 lb. in the price of cube butter during the weekend session of the produce exchange, confirms recent reviews of the butter trade by the Journal, to the effect that withdrawals from storage were hurting the trade.

There was no change in the price of butterfat for the weekend. There continues a lack of general change in the market for eggs in the local field. Undergrades under selling the general market by outsiders from the chief factor against the price here although top trade is generally stationary.

There is a quite good demand for live chickens of practically all sorts on the wholesale way for the weekend. Prices are held well in practically all lines.

There continues a very nominal movement of broiler turkeys although the country is willing to offer very freely. Leading traders are advising the country to withhold supplies until there is a more pronounced call.

Considerable weakness is showing for cantaloupes as a result of continued liberal truck offerings from Yakima and the Wapato sections. Dillard is also shipping more freely. Quality in general is good.

Despite the extreme low price which has caused many fishermen to quit along the Columbia and the smaller runs on the Oregon coast, the salmon continues to plentifully that everything except fancy chinook is dragging at low values. Fancy stuff is really scarce.

There is a very pronounced shortage of country killed calves along the wholesale way with prices firmer at the recent advance. Lambs are held firm with hog prices just about steady.

Offerings on the east side farmers' wholesale market were not so liberal as Friday but there was little change in the price situation.

Tomatoes, cantaloupes, peaches and corn continued the favorite items. Fancy tomatoes out of the Dillard section sold in a small way up to 50c per bushel, but the general market for is was not above 40c and 50c took the bulk of the good stuff.

Dillard cantaloupes were offered at $1.50 but buyers were wary. Muskmelons from the same section were priced 75c for best as were those from Grand Island and Dayton.

Corn market ruled at a spread of 60c 75c with little activity above 70c account of the lack of suitable quality.

Peach sales continued at an extreme of 50c box for Crawfords, this price being obtained for some Salem while the general market for Crawfords and Elbertas as well as Rockesters ruled 40c 50c. Loose packs were 35c 40c box.

terday noon when Sheriff Jesse Breshers was notified. About 40 men were immediately sent to the mountain and extended the search within a radius of more than a mile of Bear Wallow where Mr. and Mrs. Beery and Mrs. Vinzelberg were camped.

The American Legion team corps went to the scene on the search last night shortly after 8 o'clock and after spending the night tramping the mountains the majority of them returned to work here this morning at 7:30.

Dressed only in a thin cotton house dress with no wrap, Mrs. Vinzelberg stated that she suffered from the cold the first night, but last night found a spot protected by brush, and slept soundly. It is estimated that the temperature was almost freezing both nights she was lost at the 6000-foot altitude.

Yesterday, she states, she came upon a woman and a young girl who were picking huckleberries. She called to them but she was lost but they apparently thinking her denigrated—ran to their automobile and drove away.

While wandering about through the underbrush searching for the camp, Mrs. Vinzelberg ate huckleberries which are plentiful on Mt. Emily now, and found a spring to quench her thirst.

Mrs. Vinzelberg was put to bed at her Bear Wallow camp directly after she was found and her son-in-law states that she is suffering no ill effects from her two night's exposure, although she was exhausted.

Mrs. Vinzelberg lives in Huntington but spends the summers in La Grande with her daughter, Mrs. Beery, to escape the extreme heat at her home. They had gone to Mt. Emily for an outing because of the heat in the valley.

The Beery home is at 1702 X avenue.
