very westbound train until tomorrow morning came in. Not a sign of Toscaill. Not unless he knows how to make himself invisible. That's the sixth story that's popped on me this week. Bates wore the tip was authentic. Just talked to him over the phone and he still insists it was. Seems to me same because the big box didn't get here!"

scarcely seemed to realize she was in the room. After worrying all evening about him this was the way he came back to her! She sank to the floor in front of him, settled herself comfortably and rested one arm on his knees. Cherry was determined to win him from this mood. Smiling, she looked up. "Maybe I shouldn't be," she said, "but I'm glad that terrible man didn't get here."

apartment again next morning. She acted on knowledge gained the day before and ignored the attractive advertisements of buildings in Eastwood, exploring neighborhoods closer to the downtown section. There were plenty of vacant apartments in the east 40's and 50's, but none of them approached Cherry's ideal of the big studio with sunny windows and a fireplace. Most of them were over shops with noisy street cars clanging past. Where there were windows they looked out on dark courts or neighboring buildings that shut off the sunlight. Frayed furniture, ugly walls and floors—and for such quarters the astoundingly high rental of $50 and $60 a month!

The TINYMITES STORY BY HAL COCHRAN PICTURES BY JOE KING THE handcar wasn't hard to run. In fact, the Tinies thought it fun. Said Duncy, "We are going fast. We'd best slow up a bit. "If we all work too hard, you see, we'll get as tired as tired can be. Right now this is a dandy ride. There's no sense spolling it." "Aw, you're just lazy," Scouty cried. "You're that way, lad, whenever we ride. Keep pumping now and do your share. We'll all rest after while." And then he added, "With I knew just where the funny track leads to. I set more curious as we move on, mile after mile." JUST then they reached a little turn and Copyy cried, "Why don't you learn to keep your balance, Duncy? Why you nearly took a flop!" "Hang to the bar and hang on tight. Then everything will be all right. If anybody tumbles off, we all will have to stop." It wasn't very long until the ride had lost some of its thrill. We
