BEGIN HERE TODAY

Cherry Dixon, 19 and pretty, falls in love with Dan Phillips, newspaper reporter, whom her wealthy, aristocratic parents have forbidden her to see. When Cherry learns Dan's telephone messages have been kept from her she steals out of the house to meet him. Her father discovers this and threatens to send her to California. Cherry defies him and he orders her to leave.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

It was a week after the dinner party that had proven such a failure, Cherry Phillips, down on her knees scrubbing the bathroom linoleum, straightened up and dropped the dripping mop rag back into the pail. She surveyed her work, then with a groan wrung out the mop again and applied it to the floor.

There! It was done at last, wearily the girl got to her feet. She lifted the heavy pail to carry it to the kitchen but as she turned she caught a glimpse of herself in the mirror.

Cherry put down the pail and studied herself. What a sight she was! She had cleaned the apartment from floor to ceiling but it appeared that all the dust and dirt she had scrubbed and scraped away must have clung to her. The towel pinned about her skirt in place of an apron was blackened with grime. Her printed pink frock had once been attractive but she had worn it for housework until it was frayed and soiled.

"You're a disgrace," she told the image in the mirror. "You look like something the cat dragged in, as Sarah would say. Only no self-respecting cat would have anything to do with you because cats keep themselves clean!"

"Dan Phillips put down his knife and fork. "Maybe you think I wouldn't like a little fun once in a while," he said. "Do you know why I can't have it? Because the rent's due next week. Because I've borrowed from everyone in the office until I can't raise another nickel and I'm ashamed to ask for it. Fun? Would it interest you to know that I turned down a poker game with the boys tonight to come home and spend the evening with you? And I did it because by working all evening maybe I can write a story that will bring in some extra cash!"

The girl was subdued. "I didn't understand," she said slowly. "Of course I'll tell Dixie we won't be able to make it."

The meal proceeded. It was not an appetizing dinner and neither of them were in communicative mood. When they had finished Cherry cleared the dishes away and went upstairs to make excuses to Dixie.

She returned to find Dan sitting before his battered typewriter, a stack of fresh copy paper at his side. As quietly as possible she went about the work of washing the dishes. She tiptoed whenever she crossed the floor. Now and then she would spend the evening with you? And I did it because by working all evening maybe I can write a story that will bring in some extra cash!"

"Oh, I'm sorry," Cherry said sympathetically. "Don't waste sympathy on me. Think about yourself. The point is you ought to be getting out and having some fun. And don't, for heaven's sake, let Dan find you looking like Topsy herself. Better start scrubbing. It's going to take a long time to excavate that face."

Obediently Cherry began her ablutions. "I wish I were clever like you," she said. "I wish I could hold a job and earn money."

"Be glad you don't have to," the other told her shortly. She laughed. "I've been raving so much. I almost forgot why I came. Can you and Dan come up for a little bridge to-night? Jack McAllister's coming over and I thought we'd have a party. He's the press agent at the Capitol theater. You'll like Jack. I'll make a Welch rarebit—it's my and only culinary achievement and am I proud of it!"

"Of course we'll come," Cherry said. "I guess you're right, Dixie. I have been staying in too much."

"Good. I'll expect you around 8. That'll give you time to get out from under the black mask. Well, I'll have to scam. Lots to do in the next two hours."

Dixie departed. Cherry decided on a quick tubbing and was soon in the warm, comforting bath. Dinner would be late but at least she would be presentable. Cherry told herself Dixie had been right. It was a mistake to stay at home working all day with no recreation later. That must be why she had felt so tired and cross.

Of course they had been trying to save but they couldn't save all the time. It wasn't fair to themselves. She was dusting powder over her shoulders when Dan came.

"Hello, Dixie," she said. "Come in."

The girl on the threshold smiled brightly—and instantly the smile faded. "Suits above!" she exclaimed in a horrified voice. "What have you been doing to yourself, Cherry Phillips?"

Cherry shrugged. "I've been cleaning house." The place seemed awfully dirty and I've been at it all day.

"But, my dear, you're a wreck! Why don't you hire someone to do the cleaning? That's what I do—"

"The other girl shook her head. "We ought to talk for an hour. Hand some brute all right but as soon as we were married he stopped working. I kept my job and paid the bills until one day he got his dates with Lord, yam am I going on this way for? I didn't mean to narrate my life history!"

"I'm sorry," Cherry said sympathetically. "Don't waste sympathy on me. Think about yourself. The point is you ought to be getting out and having some fun. THE blockhouse was a sight to see. Said Duncy, "Gee, it seems to me that everything has turned out fine. The blockheads have done well."

"The house they've built will be just right for us to slumber in tonight." Then everyone was startled when there came a sudden yell.
