the veterans bureau had police records. "It is not necessary to attempt to refute these records. The B. E. F. did not act as the veterans whom it enrolled if they had ever been arrested any more than it asked what their religious beliefs were. It required only that they give satisfactory proof of honorable service in the World War. . . ."

Mitchell's report of the crowded two months history of the bonus enactment led the first groups to arrive. Later, a better element came but largely departed when congress adjourned. The best estimates of the army's size were given at 8000 to 15,000 when congress adjourned, and 6000 to 8000 at the time of the "riot" on July 28.

362 Arrests Made
A total of 362 were arrested by police during their stay for various offenses including disorderly conduct, parading without a permit, assault on private property and soliciting alms.

Of the 823 found to have been convicted in the past for criminal offenses, the largest group of 138 were for larceny and theft, 95 for drunkenness among 19 other offenses.

had been dispatched by the administration to combat bonus sentiment. "They always say that," he said. He said that although he personally was opposed to immediate payment of the bonus, as a member of an instructed delegation he would have been obliged to vote with the majority.

MacNider admitted to newspaper interviewers that sentiment supporting the administration's views on the question "probably is in the minority."

Expects Legion to be Sensible
While MacNider said he expected the Legion to be "sensible," he said "some state departments are coming here with resolutions of approval and with resolutions of disapproval. I came to Portland to see my old buddies, to renew old acquaintances and to make new ones."

Speeches by distinguished guests, including Josephus Daniels, wartime secretary of the navy, greetings from state and city dignitaries and the annual report of Henry L. Stevens Jr., national commander, occupied most of the first day's program.

A memorial service, conducted by the Rev. H. A. Darche, national chaplain, was the last item on the morning session. The national commander's dinner will be held tonight.

Flag Parade Tuesday
Tuesday will be the big day of the convention for most of the legionnaires as well as the thousands of visitors and Portland residents.

The entire day has been set aside for parades, which will eclipse anything of that order ever seen in the Pacific Northwest.

Drill teams, outfitted in natty multi-colored uniforms, and marching like machines, bugle and drum corps department units with thousands of legionnaires in flat, floats and bands will swarm through downtown streets, rain or shine.

The weather man has been cooperating and clear weather is anticipated.

Auxiliaries Meeting
Even busier than the main convention are the auxiliaries' meetings.

Would Censure Hoover
Insisting a resolution censuring President Hoover's administration over the ousting of the B. E. F. at Washington, D. C. July 28, he brought to the floor, the Pennsylvania delegation to the American Legion gathered itself for a fight to pass the measure.

The resolution presented to the committee is the same as that passed by the state department at its Pittsburgh convention. The resolution is expected to bring opposition, members of the delegation asserted, and if the committee by a majority vote rejects it, a minority report will be brought out by George Brown, Pennsylvania member of the resolutions committee.

Laurel Stopped Daniels
Laurel stopped Daniels when a wag on the convention floor shouted a mention of prohibition.

Wheat Supplies for the Season Show No Slump
World Figures as Large as Those of Year Ago—North American Supply is Larger.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12.—Domestic wheat markets lost most of their earlier gains during the week ending Sept. 9 influenced by weakness in Canadian markets as a result of heavy country marketings, according to the weekly grain market review of the U. S. bureau of agricultural economics. Sharply lower cotton prices towards the close of the week and some recession in security markets were also weakening factors. Prospects of an early harvest, with a continued dull demand for current offerings, lowered corn prices at most points. Flax held steady under fairly active crusher buying and further reductions in estimates of the crop.

With wheat harvesting practically completed in the northern hemisphere prospective wheat supplies for the current season are now more definitely known. World wheat supplies this season appear about as large as those of a year ago. The smaller world stocks of old wheat and the decrease in crop returns in the U. S., Russia, the Lower Danubian countries, North Africa and Asiatic countries, are largely offset by important increases in Canada and the deficit countries of Europe, together with prospective larger crops in the southern hemisphere countries where acreages have been increased and prospects are better than a year ago.

In addition to the available wheat supplies, large rye crops of good quality have been harvested in Northern and Western Europe, where rye is an important bread grain. Good corn crops are in prospect in Southern Europe and in the countries of the Lower Danube where corn is an important human food and largely offsets the wheat shortage in these areas.

Supplies Larger
North American wheat supplies are slightly larger than last season. Larger supplies in Canada where official estimates place the crop at 487,000,000 bushels, as against 484,000,000 bushels last season, more than counterbalancing the reduction of around 135,000,000 bushels in the U. S. supply. The Sept. 1 estimate placed the U. S. crop at 715,000,000 bushels compared with 894,000,000 bushels in 1931, with a decrease of 347,000,000 bushels in winter wheat only about half offset by an increase of around 170,000,000 bushels in spring wheat.

The European wheat crop is larger than last season and generally of good quality in most important producing areas. Estimates and forecasts of production in 25 European countries which last year produced 99 per cent of the European crop, exclusive of Russia, indicate an output of 1,480,000,000 bushels compared with 1,431,000,000 bushels last season. It is significant that harvests of practically every country of Western and Southern Europe are larger than those of a year ago. The quality of the crops in these countries are generally good with injury to the Italian crop much less serious than earlier reports indicated.

Coast Market Weak
Pacific coast markets were also weak and lower, reflecting the lack of export outlet and limited domestic demand for the local wheat. Receipts at Puget Sound and Columbia river terminals were of moderate volume, totaling 837 cars for the week but consisted principally of consignment for storage or deliveries on earlier contracts. Receipts at Montana country stations were reported only about 50 per cent of those for the same period last year with farmers holding grain on farms. Domestic mills provided the primary outlet since local prices were too high to effect export sales in Europe or the Orient in competition with Canadian and Australian wheat. About the usual quantities of flour were reported sold to the Philippines, California and the Atlantic seaboard. Prices of cash wheat at Portland held unchanged except hard white which advanced 5c per bushel. At the close of the market Sept. 9 western white, hard winter, northern spring and western red were quoted at 51½c, bluestem hard white at 53c and soft white at 54½c, sacked, basis No. 1, 12 per cent protein hard hard northern was quoted at 50½c per bu., sacked. At Seattle western red and western white were quoted at 54½c, hard winter at 55c, and Baart 63c, sacked, with Montana dark northern spring quoted at 70c in bulk.
