

Leap Year Bride

down town in the big car. It was arranged that he was to call for Cherry each afternoon and take her to her parents' home for an hour or two.

Cherry leaned back against the thick upholstery and smiled, as the automobile rolled along. She was used yet very happy. The past week had been a tremendous strain but out of so much suffering the world seemed to be righting itself. Her mother was on the road to recovery. Her father for the first time seemed to have lost his aloof, intimidating pose. Walter Dixon had found something he could not build case and territory—life. Both of her parents were at last reconciled to her marriage.

"Poor Dan!" the girl thought. "I wonder how he's been managing about meals and clean shirts and if he's been at work on time. The apartment must be a sight!"

A glow of warm tenderness, of sympathy enveloped her. For days Cherry's thoughts had been selfish, concerned only with others. She felt suddenly a great need for Dan's strength and love.

It was the same road over which she had traveled a week before when Martin's driving had seemed so often in the days when they were living at the hotel. The chauffeur closed the door after her, touched his cap and drove away.

Dan was nowhere a night but Cherry was not disturbed. She had learned to expect him to be late. A boy in knee trousers was selling flowers from a basket farther down the street. Cherry strolled toward him, selected a rose to fasten to her blouse and gave him a quarter for it.

"Here's your change, lady," the boy began as Cherry moved away. She smiled, told him to keep the coin.

Office workers, late at their posts, were hurrying along the streets. Many of the girls were dressed in

(READ THE STORY, THEN COLOR THE PICTURE)

WHILE hanging to the great, tall tree one Tiny said, "It seems to me that we have been real lucky. That kite saved us from a flop."

"I know, by looking all around, that we'd have plunked down on the ground. The kite brought us right to this tree and broke an awful drop."

Another added, "You are right! And now look at the poor old kite. It hit the tree and broke apart. Its flying days are over."

"I wish that we could keep the thing. 'Twas like a big bird on the wing. But we will have to leave it here. It's no good any more."

THEN Scouty said, "Let's scramble round the branches till we reach the ground. I'm tired of hanging to this limb. It's swaying in the air."

"Although the tree is very tall, if we are careful we won't fall. Please take your time or we will likely have another scare!"

So, down they started, one by one.

"If he doesn't come in five minutes," she decided, "I'd better call the office. Of course if anything happened he knows he hasn't any way to reach me."

Deliberately Cherry turned her back on the clock. She watched the boy with the flowers sell a bouquet to a slim, stoop-shouldered man with white hair. No other customers came to buy. The boy looked up and down the street and then moved away.

Cherry swung around. No, Dan was not in sight yet. Then she saw him. He was crossing the street, coming toward her and at his side was a girl in white. She wore a white hat and white shoes. Her head was thrown back and she was looking up at Dan and laughing.

Jealousy, white hot and scorching, flamed up in Cherry's heart. Who was this girl and what right had she to be laughing like that and swinging along beside Dan?

With sudden and unreasoning anger Cherry resented this other girl.

The Kitchen Chautauqua

a diversion for every housewife
... a treat to limited budgets

IF YOURS is the sort of budget that allows T-bone steaks and mushrooms and eight-course dinner parties, you're lucky. But if you have to watch the dollars and the pennies and can't afford such dietetic morsels as T-bones, you can have just as much fun—or more—in the kitchen and serve every bit as tasty and as nutritious meals as the finest royal chef in any palace.

It's all a matter of planning and of budgeting, of converting the left-overs into appetite teasers—and there's all sorts of romance lurking in your cupboard shelves and bins in doing so.

Our "Kitchen Chautauqua" will give you timely hints on meal-planning and buying, on the simple quirks and fashions that simplify cookery, on the 1932 variations of the old and fascinating art that is cookery. Reserve every one of the dates—you can't afford to miss a single program.
